The next a tradesman, meek and much a liar. Pope's Ep.

TRA'DEFUL. adj. [trade and full.] Commercial; busy in traffick.

Ye tradeful merchants that with weary toil
Do seek most precious things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure spoil,
What needeth you to seek so far in vain. Spenser.

TRADITION. n. f [tradition, Fr. traditio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of delivering accounts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.

To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received. Hooker, b. iii.

2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.

They the truth
With superstitions and traditions taint,
Left only in those written records pure. Milton
Our old solemnities
From no blind zeal, or fond tradition rise;
But sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the God of day. Pope's Statius.

TRADI'TIONAL. adj. [from tradition.]

1. Delivered by tradition, descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.

Whence may we have the infallible traditional sense of scripture, if not from the heads of their church? Tillotson.

If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the same traditional sloth and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits. Swift.

2. Observant of traditions, or idle rites. Not used, nor proper.

God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
(Blessed may he)
—You are too senseless obstinate, my lord;
Too ceremonious and traditional. Shakesp. Rich. II.

TRADI'TIONALLY adv. [from traditional]

1. By transmission from age to age.

There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from Saint John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials

It crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchiale and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day Brown's Vulgar Err.

TRADI'TIONARY. adj. [from tradition.] Delivered by tradition.

Suppose the same traditionary strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain,
Inveterate truth, an old plain Sabine's heart. Dryden.

Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditionary sense of texts of scripture. Tillotson.

The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages. Addison on the Christian Religion.

TRA'DITIVE. adj. [traditive, Fr. from trado, Latin.] Transmitted or transmissible from age to age

Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide. Dryd. H. and Pant.

To TRADU'CE. v. a. [traduco, Lat. traduire, Fr.]

1. To censure; to condemn, to represent as blameable; to calumniate; to decry.

The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the publick devout prayers of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, to bring them into contempt, and so slack the force of all mens devotion towards them. Hooker, b. v.

Thoſe particular ceremonies which they pretend to be ſo [illegible], we ſhall more thoroughly ſift, when other things alſo traduced in the publick duties of the church are, together with theſe, to be touched. Hooker, b. iv

Whilſt calumny has ſuch potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth; as long as men are malicious and deſigning they will be traducing. Gov. of the Tongue.

From that preface he took his hint; though he had the baſeneſs not to acknowledge his benefactor, but inſtead of it to traduce me in lies. Dryden's Fab.

2. To propagate; to encreaſe by deriving one from another.

None are ſo groſs as to contend for this,
That ſouls from bodies may traduced be,
Between whoſe natures no proportion is,
When root and branch in nature ſtill agree. Daniel.

From theſe only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth. Hale.

Some believe the ſoul is made by God, ſome by angels, and ſome by the generant whether it be immediately created or traduced hath been the great ball of contention in the latter ages. Glanville's Scepſy

TRADU'CEMENT n. ſ. [from traduce.] Cenſure; calumny.

Rome muſt know
The value of her own: 'twere a concealment
Worſe than a theft, no leſs than a traducement,
To hide your doings. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus

TRADU'CER. n. ſ. [from traduce.] A falſe cenſurer; a calumniator.

TRADU'CIBLE adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived

Though oral tradition ought be a competent diſcoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet ſuch a tradition were inconſiſtent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, becauſe they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally traducible to ſo great a diſtance of ages. Hale.

TRADU'CTION n. ſ. [from traduce.]

1. Derivation from one of the ſame kind; propagation

The patrons of traduction accuſe their adverſaries of affronting the attributes of God, and the aſſertors of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of things. Glanville.

If by traduction came thy mind,
Our wonder is the leſs to find
A fool ſo warming from a ſtock ſo good,
Thy father was transfuſed into thy blood Dryden

2. Tradition, tranſmiſſion from one to another.

Touching traditional communication and traduction of truths conſtantial and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that derivation. Hale.

3. Conveyance.

Since America is divided on every ſide by conſiderable ſeas, [illegible] only be by ſhipping: though this was a method uſed for the traduction of uſeful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions ſhould have ſo much care uſed for their tranſportation. Hale's Origin of Man ind.

4. Tranſition.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetorick of repetition and traduction. Bacon

TRA'FFICK. n. ſ. [trafique, Fr. traffico, Italian.]

TWI'STER. n. ſ. [from twiſt] One who twiſts; a ropemaker.
To this word I have annexed ſome remarkable lines, which explain twiſt in all its ſenſes
When a twiſter a-twiſting will twiſt him a twiſt,
For the twiſting of his twiſt, he three twines doth intwiſt;
But if one of the twines of the twiſt do untwiſt,
The twine that untwiſteth untwiſteth the twiſt.
Untwiſting the twine that intwiſteth between,
He twirls with his twiſter, the two in a twine,
Then twice having twiſted the twines of the twine,
He twiſteth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twins were intwiſted, he now doth untwine,
'Twixt the twain intertwiſting a twine more between,
He, twirling his twiſter, makes a twiſt of the twine. Wallis.

A vagabond in Afric. Addison's Cato.

2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.

Vagabond is a person without a home. Watts.

VAGARY. n. s. [from vagus, Latin.] A wild freak; a capricious frolick.

They chang'd their minds,
Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
As they wou'd dance. Milton's Par. Lost. b. vi. l. 613.
Would your son engage in some frolic, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with, than without your knowledge? Locke on Education, § 97.

VAGINOPE'NNOUS. n. s. [vagina and penna, Latin.] Sheath-winged, having the wings covered with hard cases.

VAGOUS. adj. [vagus, Lat. vague, Fr.] Wandering, unsettled. Not in use.

Such as were born and begot of a single woman, thro' a vagous lust, were called Spurii. Ayliffe.

VAGRANCY. n. s. [from vagrant] A state of wandering, unsettled condition.

VA'GRANT. adj. Wandering; unsettled, vagabond; unfixed in place.

Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and fictitious stories. More's Divine Dialogues
Take good heed what men will think and say;
That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took,
Her father's house, and civil life forsook. Prior.
Her lips no living bard, I weet,
May say how red, how round, how sweet;
Old Homer only could indite
Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:
They stand recorded in his book,
When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke. Prior.

VA'GRANT. n. s. [vagant, Fr.] A sturdy beggar; wanderer; vagabond; man unsettled in habitation. In an ill sense

Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view,
Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill. Prior.
You'll not the progress of your atoms stay,
Nor to collect the vagrants find a way. Blackmore.
To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievous, are things of evident use. F. Atterbury.
Ye vagrants of the sky,

VAGUE. adj. [vague, Fr. vagus, Latin.]

1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.

[illegible] upon the vague terms, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight. Hayward

2. [illegible], undetermined, uncertain, indefinite.

The perception of being, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever and thing, than it does to any other ideas. Locke.

VAIL. n. s. [voile, French. This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Latin, and the verb veil, from the verb velo; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the French.]

1. A curtain, a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.

While they supposed to lie hid in their secret sins, they were scattered under a dark veil of forgetfulness. Wisdom.

2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.

3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural. See VALE

To VAIL. v. a. To cover. See VEIL.

To VAIL v. a. [avaler le bonet, French.]

1. To not fail, to suffer to descend

The virgin 'gan her beavor vale,
And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale. Fairfax.

2. To let fall in token of respect.

Certain of the Turks gallies, which would not vail their top-sails, the Venetians fiercely assailed. Knolles's Hist

They had not the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in salutations, for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Add.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.

That furious Scot,
'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
Of those that turn'd their backs. Shakespeare.

To VAIL. v. n. To yield, to give place; to shew respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written veil

Thy convenience must veil to thy neighbour's necessity, and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity. South.

VAIN adj. [vain, Fr. vanus, Latin.]

1. Fruitless; ineffectual

Let no man speak again
To alter this; for counsel is but vain Shakespeare
Vain is the force of man,
To crush the pillars which the pile sustain. Dryden.

2. Empty; unreal, shadowy.

Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,
Gorgons, Geryon with his triple frame,
And vain chimera, vomits empty flame. Dryden's Æn.
Unmov'd his eyes, and wet his beard appears;
And shedding vain, but seeming real tears. Dryden.

3. Meanly proud; proud of petty things.

No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be still boasting of himself. L'Estran.
He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.
The minstrels play'd on ev'ry side,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd. Dryden.
To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride. Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like; by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told: whereas a man truly proud, thinks the honours below his merit, and scorns to boast. Swift.
Ah friend! to dazzle let the vain design,
To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.
View this marble, and be vain no more. Pope.

4. Shewy; ostentatious.

5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.

Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
Or happiness. Milton's Paradise Lost.
He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
That all the actions of our life were vain,
Which with our sense of pleasure not conspir'd. Denham.
To your vain answer will you have recourse,
And tell 'tis ingenite active force. [illegible]

6. False; not true.

7. In VAIN. To no purpose, to no end, ineffectually; without effect.

He tempts in vain. Milton.
Providence [illegible]
Strong Halys stands in vain; weak Phlegys flies. Dryd.
The philosophers of old did in vain enquire whether summum bonum consisted in riches, bodily delights, virtue, or contemplation. Locke.
If we hope for what we are not likely to possess, we act and think in vain, and make life a greater dream and shadow than it really is. Addison's Spect
If from this discourse one honest man shall receive satisfaction, I shall think that I have not written nor lived in vain. West on the Resurrection.

VAINGLO'RIOUS. adj. [vanus and gloriosus, Latin.] Boasting without performances; proud in disproportion to desert.

Vain-glorious man, when flutt'ring wind does blow,
In his light wings is lifted up to sky. Fairy Queen.
Strength to glory aspires
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

He had nothing of vain-glory, but yet kept state and majesty to the height, being sensible, that majesty maketh the people bow, but vain glory boweth to them. Bacon's Hen VII.
Expose every blast of vain-glory, every idle thought, to be chastened by the rod of spiritual discipline. Taylor.
This extraordinary person, out of his natural aversion to vain-glory, wrote several pieces, which he did not assume the honour of. Addison.
A monarch's sword, when mad vain-glory draws;
Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's scar Pope.

VAI'NLY. adv. [from vain]

1. Without effect, to no purpose, in vain.

Our cannons malice vainly shall be spent
Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shakesp.
In weak complaints you vainly waste your breath;
They are not tears that can revenge his death. Dryden.

2. Proudly; arrogantly.

My forepast proofs, howe'er the matter fall,

Shal.

Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little. Shakespeare.
Humility teaches us to think neither vainly nor vauntingly of ourselves. Delany.

3. Idly, foolishly.
Nor vainly hope to be invulnerable. Milton.
If Lentulus be ambitious, he shall be vainly credulous; presuming his advancement to be decreed by the Sybilline oracles. Grew's Cosmol.

VA'INNESS. n. f. [from vain.] The state of being vain. Pride; falsehood; emptiness.
I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Than lying, vainness, babbling. Shakespeare.

V[illegible] n. f. [[illegible], a governor, Sclavonian] A province of the Dacian provinces.

VA'LANCE. n. f. [from Valencia, whence the use of them came. Skinner.] The fringes or drapery hanging round the tester and stead of a bed.
My house
Is richly furnished with plate and gold;
Valance of Venice, gold in needlework. Shakspeare.
Thrust the valance of the bed, that it may be full in sight. Swift.

To VALA'NCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with drapery. Not in use.
Old friend, thy face is valanc'd since
I saw thee last; com'st thou to beard me. Shakes.

VALE. n. f. [val, Fr. vallis, Latin.]
1. A low ground; a valley; a place between two hills. Vale is a poetical word.
In Ida vale who knows not Ida vale?
An hundred shepherds woned. Spenser.
Met in the vale of Arde. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
Architles, in a flow'ry vale,
Review'd his muster'd race, and took the tale. Dryden.

2. [From avail, profit; or vale, farewell. If from avail, it must be written vail, as Dryden writes. If from vale, which I think is right, it must be vale.] Money given to servants.
Since our knights and senators account
To what their fordid, begging vails amount;
Judge what a wretched share the poor attends,
Whose whole subsistence on those alms depends. Dryden.

VALEDI'CTION. n. f. [valedico, Lat.] A farewel. Ainsw.
A valediction forbidding to weep. Donne.

VALEDI'CTORY. adj. [from valedico, Lat.] Bidding farewel.

Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Milton.
2. Having force, prevalent, weighty, conclusive.
A difference in their sentiments as to particular questions, is no valid argument against the general truth believed by them, but rather a clearer and more solid proof of it. Stephens.

VALI'DITY. n. f. [validité Fr. from valid.]
1. Force to convince; certainty.
You are persuaded of the validity of that famous verse,
'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Pope.
2. Value. A sense not used.
To thee and thine
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
Than that conferr'd on Goneril. Shakespeare.

VA'LLANCY. n. f. [from valiant.] A large wig that shades the face.
But you, loud Sirs, who through your curls look big,
Cricket in prune and white vallancy wig. Dryden.

VA'LLEY. n. f. [vallée, Fr. vallis, Latin.] A low ground, a hollow between hills.
Live with me, and be my love,

VA'LOUR. n. f. [valeur, Fr. vaor, Latin. Ainsw.] Personal b[illegible]
hat I may pour the spirits in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Here I contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against my valour. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleo.
An innate valour appeared in him, when he put himself upon the soldiers defence, as he received the mortal stab. Howel.
For no temptation he, and valour form'd,
For softness she, and sweet attractive grace. Milton.
Such were these giants, men of high renown!
For, in those days, might only shall be admir'd,
And valour, and heroic virtue, call'd Milton.
Valour gives awe, and promises protection to those who want heart or strength to defend themselves. This makes the authority of men among women; and that of a master-buck in a numerous herd. Temple's Miscel.

VA'LUABLE. adj. [valuable, Fr. from value.]
1. Precious; being of great price.
2. Worthy, deserving regard.
A just account of that valuable person, whose remains lie before us. F. Atterbury's Serm.

VALUA'TION. n. f. [from value.]
1. Value set upon any thing.
No reason I, since of your lives you set
So slight a valuation, should reserve
My crack'd one to more care. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
Take out of men's minds false valuations, and it would leave the minds of a number of men, poor shrunken things. Bacon.
The writers expressed not the valuation of the denarius, without regard to its present valuation. Arbuthnot on Coins.
2. The act of setting a value, appraisement.
Humility in man consists not in denying any gift that is in him, but in a just valuation of it, rather thinking too meanly than too highly. Ray on the Creation.

VALUA'TOR. n. f. [from value.] An appraiser; one who sets upon any thing its price.
What valuators will the bishops make use of? Swift.

VALUE n. f. [value, Fr. valor, Lat.]
1. Price; worth.
Ye are physicians of no value. Job xiii.
2. High rate.
Cæsar is well acquainted with your virtues,
And therefore sets this value on your life:
Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship,
And name your terms. Addison's Cato
3. Rate; price equal to the worth of the thing bought.
He sent him money, it was with this obliging test money, that his design was not to pay him the value of his pictures, because they were above any price Dryden.

To VALUE. v. a. [valuer, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To rate at a certain price.

When the country grows better inhabited, the tithes and other obventions will be more augmented, and better valued. Spenser.

A mind valuing his reputation at the due price, will repute all dishonest gain much inferior thereunto. Carew's Survey.

God alone values right the good. Milton.

2. To rate highly; to have in high esteem.

Some of the finest treatises in dialogue, many very valued pieces of French, Italian, and English appear. Addison.

Swift through the valves the visionary fair
Repass'd. Pope's Odyss. b. iv.

2. Any thing that opens over the mouth of a vessel.

This air, by the opening of the valve, and forcing up of the sucker, may be driven out. Boyle's Works.

3. [In anatomy.] A kind of membrane, which opens in certain vessels to admit the blood, and shuts to prevent its regress.

The arteries, with a contractile force, drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

VA'LVULE. n. s. [valvule, Fr.] A small valve.

VAMP. n. s. The upper leather of a shoe. Ainsworth.

To VAMP. v. a. [This is supposed probably enough by Skinner to be derived from avant, Fr. before; and to mean laying on a new outside.] To piece an old thing with some new part.

You wish
To vamp a body with a dangerous physick,
That's sure of death without. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

This opinion hath been vamped up by Cardan. Bentley.

I had never much hopes of your vamp't play. Swift.

VA'MPER. n. s. [from vamp.] One who pieces out an old thing with something new.

VAN. n. s. [from avant, French.]

1. The front of an army; the first line.

The foe he had survey'd,
Arrang'd, as to him they did appear,
With van, main battle, wings and rear. Hudibras.

Van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hast'ning up behind. Dryden.

2. [van, Fr. vannus, Latin.] Any thing spread wide by which a wind is raised, a fan.

The other token of their ignorance of the sea was an oar, they call it a corn-van. Notes on Odyss.

3. A wing with which the air is beaten.

His sail-broad vans
He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoke
Uplifted, spurns the ground. Milton's Par. Lost.

A fiery globe
Of angels on full sail of wing drew nigh,
Who on their plumy vans receiv'd him soft
From his uneasy station, and upbore,
As on a floating couch, through the blithe air. Milton.

His disabled wing unstrung
He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
His vans no longer could his flight sustain. Dryden.

The vanes are broad on one side, and narrower on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derh.

VA'NCOURIER. n. s. [avantcourier, French.] A harbinger; a precursor.

VANE. n. s. [vane, Dutch.] A plate hung on a pin to turn with the wind.

A man she would spell backward,
If tall, a lance ill-headed;
If speaking, why a vane blown with all winds. Shakesp.

VA'NGUARD. n. s. [avant garde, French.] The front, or first line of the army.

VANILLA. n. s. [vanille, French.] A plant. It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of six leaves, five of which are placed in a circular order, and the middle one is concave: the empalement becomes an horned, soft, fleshy fruit, filled with very small seeds. The fruit of those plants is used to scent chocolate. Miller.

When mixed with vanillas, or spices, it acquires the good and bad qualities of aromatic oils. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To VANISH. v. n. [vanesco, Latin. evanouir, Fr.]

1. To lose perceptible existence.

High honour is not only gotten and born by pain and danger, but must be nursed by the like, or else vanisheth as soon as it appears to the world. Sidney.

Whither are they vanish'd?
—Into the air; and what seem'd corporal
Melted as breath into the wind. Shakespeare.

While fancy brings the vanish'd piles to view,
And builds imaginary Rome anew. Pope.

2. To pass away from the sight; to disappear.

Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest. Shakesp.

He cut the cleaving sky,
And in a moment vanish'd from her eye. Pope's Odyss.

3. To pass away; to be lost.

All these delights will vanish. Milton.

That spirit of religion and seriousness, by which we had distinguished ourselves, vanished all at once, and a spirit of infidelity and prophaneness started up. Atterbury.

VA'NITY. n. s. [vanitas, Lat. vanité, Fr.]

1. Emptiness; uncertainty, inanity.

2. Fruitless desire, fruitless endeavour.

Vanity possesseth many, who are desirous to know the certainty of things to come. Sidney.

Thy pride,
And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
Rejected my forewarning. Milton.

3. Trifling labour.

To use long discourse against those things which are both against scripture and reason, might rightly be judged a vanity in the answerer, not much inferior to that of the inventor. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

4. Falsehood, untruth.

Here I may well shew the vanity of that which is reported in the story of Walsingham. Sir J. Davies.

5. Empty pleasure, vain pursuit; idle shew, unsubstantial enjoyment, petty object of pride.

Were it not strange if God should have made such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leave them all to be contained in secular vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employed in his own service. Hooker.

I must
Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
Some vanity of mine art. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Cast not her serious wit on idle things,
Make her free will slave to vanity. Davies.

Sin, with vanity, had fill'd the works of men. Milton.

The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their dress, and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equal, if not surpass them, in the vanity of their desires. South.

Think not when woman's transient breath is fled,
That all her vanities at once are dead,
Succeeding vanities she still regards,
And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards. Pope.

6. Ostentation, arrogance.

The ground-work thereof is true, however they, through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own antiquity. Spenser.

Whether it were out of the same vanity, which possessed all those learned philosophers and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right authors names, those things which he had read in the scriptures; or fearing the severity of the Areopagite, and the example of his master Socrates, I cannot judge. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

7. Petty pride; pride exerted upon slight grounds, pride operating on small occasions

Can you add guilt to vanity, and take
A pride to hear the conquests which you make. Dryden.

'Tis an old maxim in the schools,
That vanity's the food of fools,
Yet now and then your men of wit
Will condescend to take a bit. Swift's Miscel.

To VAN. v. a. [from vannus, Lat. vanner, Fr.] To fan; to winnow. Not in use.

The corn, which in vanning lieth lowest is the best. Bacon.

To VANQUISH. v. a. [vaincre, French.]

1. To conquer, to overcome, to subdue

Wert't not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar,
The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,
Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you? Shakesp.

They subdued and vanquished the rebels in all encounters. Clarendon, b. viii.

The gods the victor, Cato the vanquished chose
But you have done what Cato could not do,
To chuse the vanquished, and restore him too. Dryden.

2. To confute.

This bold assertion has been fully vanquished in a late reply to the bishop of Meaux's treatise. F. Atterbury.

VANQUISHER n. s. [from vanquish.] Conqueror; subduer.

He would pawn his fortunes
To hopeless restitution, so he might
Be call'd your vanquisher. Shakespeare.

I shall rise victorious, and subdue
My vanquisher; spoil'd of his vaunted spoil. Milton.

Troy's vanquisher, and great Achilles' son. A. Philips.

VANTAGE. n. s. [from advantage.]

1. Gain; profit.

What great vantage do we get by the trade of a pastor? Sydney.

2. Superiority, state in which one has better means of action than another.

With the vantage of mine own excuse,

VEGETABI'LITY. n. f. [from vegetable.] Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without ſenſation.

The coagulating ſpirits of ſalts, and lapidifical juice of the ſea, entering the parts of the plant, overcomes its vegetability, and converts it unto a lapideous ſubſtance. Browne.

VE'GETABLE. n. f. [vegetabilis, ſchool Lat. vegetable, Fr.] Any thing that has growth without ſenſation, as plants.

Vegetables are organized bodies conſiſting of various parts, containing veſſels furniſhed with different juices; and taking in their nouriſhment from without, uſually by means of a root, by which they are fixed to the earth, or to ſome other body, as in the generality of plants, ſometimes by means of pores diſtributed over the whole ſurface, as in ſub-marine plants. Hill's Materia Medica.

Let brutes and vegetables that cannot drink,
So far as drought and nature urges, think. Waller.

In vegetables it is the ſhape, and in bodies, not propagated by ſeed, it is the colour we moſt fix on. Locke.

Other animated ſubſtances are called vegetables, which have within themſelves the principle of another ſort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers and fruit, ſuch as we ſee in plants, herbs, trees. Watts.

VEGETABLE. adj. [vegetabilis, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a plant.

The vegetable world, each plant and tree,
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
To creeping moſs. Prior.

Both mechaniſms are equally curious, from one uniform juice to extract all the variety of vegetable juices; or from ſuch variety of food to make a fluid very near uniform to the blood of an animal. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The warm ſhower'd earth
Is deep enrich'd with vegetable life. Thomſon.

2. Having the nature of plants.

Amidſt them ſtood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambroſial fruit

Rain-water may be endued with ſome vegetating or prolifick virtue, derived from ſome ſaline or oleoſe particles. Ray.

As long as the ſeeds remained lodged in a natural ſoil, they would ſoon vegetate, and ſend forth a new ſet of trees. Woodward.

See dying vegetables life ſuſtain;
See life diſſolving vegetate again. Pope's Eſſay on Man.

VEGETATION. n. ſ. [from vegeto, Latin.]

1. The power of producing the growth of plants.

The exterior ſurface conſiſted of a terreſtrial matter proper for the nouriſhment of plants, being little entangled with mere mineral matter, that was unfit for vegetation. Woodward.

The ſun, deep-darting to the dark retreat
Of vegetation, ſets the ſteaming power
At large. Thomſon's Spring.

Love warbles through the vocal groves,
And vegetation paints the plain. Anonymous.

2. The power of growth without ſenſation.

Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with ſenſe, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility. Hooker.

Theſe pulſations I attribute to a plaſtick nature, or vital principle, as the vegetation of plants muſt alſo be. Ray.

VEGETATIVE. adj. [vegetatif, Fr. from vegetate.]

1. Having the quality of growing without life.

Creatures vegetative and growing, have their ſeeds in themſelves. Raleigh's Hiſt. of the World.

Univerſal hubbub wild,
Of ſtunning ſounds and voices all confus'd,
Aſſaults his ear with loudeſt vehemence. Milton.

2. Ardour; mental violence, terrour.

Think ye are men; deem it not impoſſible for you to err: ſift impartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reaſon, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred, and ſtill doth feed theſe opinions in you. Hooker's Pref.

The beſt perſuaſions
Fail not to uſe; and with what vehemency
Th' occaſion ſhall inſtruct you. Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.

Would it apply well to the vehemence of your affection, that I ſhould win what you would enjoy? Shakeſp.

The extremity of the condition produced ſome earneſtneſs and vehemency of expreſſion more than ordinary. Clarendon.

This pure cauſe would kindle my rap'd ſpirits
To ſuch a flame of ſacred vehemence,
That dumb things would be mov'd to ſympathize. Milton.

He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in leſs compaſs than two months. This vehemence of his is moſt ſuitable to my temper. Dryden.

Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints
Have ſo much earneſtneſs and paſſion in them,
I hear him with a ſecret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addiſon's Cato.

VEHEMENT. adj. [vehement, Fr. vehemens, Lat.]

Evil ſpirits might very properly appear in vehicles of flame, to terrify and ſurpriſe. Addiſon's Guardian.

2. That part of a medicine which ſerves to make the principal ingredient potable.

That the meat deſcends by one paſſage; the drink, or moiſtening vehicle by another, is a popular tenent. Brown.

3. That by means of which any thing is conveyed.

The gaiety of a diverting word, serves as a vehicle to convey the force and meaning of a thing. L'Estrange.

To VEIL. v. a. [velo, Lat. See VAIL.]

1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.

Her face was veil'd; yet to my fancied sight,
Love, sweetness, goodness in her person shin'd. Milton.

It became the Jewish fashion when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Boyle.

2. To cover, to invest.

I descry,
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heav'nly host. Milton.

3. To hide, to conceal.

Of darkness what be lent
As half to shew, half veil the deep intent. Pope's Dunciad.

VEIL. n. s. [velum, Latin.]

1. A cover to conceal the face.

To feed his fiery lustful eye,
He snatch'd the veil that hung her face before. Fairy Queen.

The Paphian queen from that fierce battle borne,
With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,
Like terror did among the immortals breed. Waller.

The famous painter cou'd allow no place
For private sorrow in a prince's face:
Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Waller.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
Such metaphors appear when right apply'd.
When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,
Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense. Granville.

She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame. Pope.

2. A cover; a disguise.

I will pluck the borrow'd veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acteon. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Knock on my heart, for thou hast skill to find
If it found solid, or be fill'd with wind,
And thro the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind. D

The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over. Addison.

VEIN n. s. [veine, Fr. vena, Latin.]

The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins, the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins, as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, except those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranes or valves; like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, with their mouths towards the heart. In the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are pressed close to the side of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves, and they being distended, stop up the channel, so that no blood can repass them. Quincy.

When I on first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman. Shakespeare.

Horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton.

2. Hollow; cavity.

Found where casual fire
Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale,
Down to the veins of earth. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let the glass of the prisms be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes. Newton's Opticks.

3. Course of metal in the mine.

There is a vein for the silver. Job xxviii. 1.

Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.

It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of. Swift's Thoughts.

4. Tendency or turn of the mind or genius.

We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our vein. Dryden.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.

Artizans have not only their growths and perfections, but likewise their veins and times. Wotton's Architecture.

6. Humour; temper.

I put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.

I am not in the giving vein to-day. Shakesp. Rich. III.

Certainly he that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need to be afraid of others. Bacon.

Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines. Thomson.

VELLE'ITY. n. s. [velleite, Fr. velleitas, from velle, Latin.]

Velleity is the school-term used to signify the lowest degree of desire. Locke.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it, but it is that which is called by the schools an imperfect velleity, and imports no more than an idle, unoperative complacency in, and desire of the end, without any consideration of the means. South.

To VELLICATE. v. a. [vellico, Latin.] To twitch; to pluck, to act by stimulation.

Those smells are all strong, and do pole and vellicate the sense. Bacon.

Convulsions arising from something vellicating a nerve in its extremity, are not very dangerous. Arbuthnot.

VELLICATION. n. s. [vellicatio, Lat.] Twitching; stimulation.

All purgers have a kind of twitching and vellication, besides the griping, which cometh of wind. Bacon.

There must be a particular motion and vellication impress upon the nerves, else the sensation of heat will not be produced. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

VE'LLUM. n. s. [velin, Fr. vitamen, Latin, rather vitulinum, low Latin.] The skin of a calf dressed for the writer.

The skull was very thin, yielding to the least pressure of my finger, as a piece of vellum. Wiseman.

VELOCITY n. s. [velocité, Fr. velocitas, Latin.] Speed; swiftness, quick motion.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun; or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but moved in hyperbola's or parabola's, or in ellipses very eccentric. Bentley's Sermons.

VE'LVET. n. s. [velluto, Ital. villus, Latin. velours, Fr.] Silk with a short fur or pile upon it.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

The different ranging the superficial parts of bodies, as of velvet, watered silk, we think probably is nothing but the different refraction of their insensible parts. Locke.

VE'LVET. adj.

1. Made of velvet.

This was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

2. Soft; delicate.

Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find. Shak

Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Then being alone
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company S

To VE'LVET. v. n. To pile velvet.

Verditure, ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the palest green that is, but good to velvet upon black in any drapery. Peacham on Drawing.

The manner of their venation we shall find to be other ways than by sawing away of trees. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To VEND. v. a. [vendre, Fr. vendo, Lat.] To sell, to offer to sale.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which not having the occasion he expected to vend, and make use of, lay by him. Boyle.

VENDER. n. s. [from vend.] One to whom any thing is sold.

If a vicar sows his glebe, or if he sells his corn, and the vender cuts it, he must pay the tithes to the parson. Ayliffe.

VE'NDER. n. s. [vendeur, Fr. from vend.] A seller.

Where the consumption of commonty is, the venders seat themselves. Graunt.

Those make the most noise who have the least to sell, which is very observable in the venders of card-matches. Swanson.

VENDIBLE. adj. [vendibilis, Latin.] Saleable; marketable.

Silence only is commendable
In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible. Shakesp.

This so profitable and vendible a merchandise, riseth not to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities. Carew.

The ignorant mine-man, aiming only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible under such a determinate name, has neither the design nor skill to make nice separations of the heterogeneous bodies. Boyle.

VE'NDIBLENESS. n. s. [from vendible.] The state of being saleable.

VENDITA'TION. n. s. [venditatio, from vendito, Latin.] Boastful display.

Some, by a cunning profession against all reading, and venditation of their own naturals, think to divert the sagacity of their readers from themselves, and cool the scent of their own fox like thefts; when yet they are so rank as a man may find whole pages together stumped from one author. B. Johnson.

VENDITION. n. s. [venditio, Fr. venditum, Latin.] Sale, the act of selling.

To VENEER. v. a. [among cabinet-makers.] To make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine woods of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood. Bailey.

These were enormities condemned by the most natural verdict of common humanity; and so very gross and foul, that no man could pretend ignorance avoided. South.

VE'RDIGRISE. n. f. The rust of brass, which in time being consumed and eaten with tallow, turneth into green, in Latin aerugo; in French vert de gris, or the hoary green Peacham.
Brass turned into green, is called verdigrise [illegible]

VE'RDITURE. n. f.
Verditure ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the fairest and palest green. Peacham.

VE'RDURE. n. f. [verdure, Fr.] Green; green colour.
Its verdure clad
Her universal face with pleasant green. Milton.
Let twisted olive bind those laurels fast,
Whose verdure must for ever last. Prior.

VE'RDUROUS. adj. [from verdure.] Green; covered with green, decked with green.
Higher than their tops
The verdurous wall of paradise up-grung;
Which to our general sire gave prospect large. Milton.
There the lowing herds chew verdurous pasture. Philips

VERECU'ND. adj. [verecond, old French; verecundus, Latin.] Modest; bashful. Dict.

VE'RGE. n. f. [verge, Fr. virga, Latin.]
1. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority. The mace of a dean
Suppose him now a dean compleat,
Devoutly lolling in his seat
The silver verge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.
2. [verge, Latin.] The brink, the edge; the utmost border.
Would the ambitious verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain Shakesp.
I say, and will in battle prove,
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge,
That ever was survey'd by English eye.
You are old,
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine. Shakesp. K. Lear.
Serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same watry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve and shower the earth. Milton.
Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul, that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all, and verge enough for more. Dryden
Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem. Addison.
Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir,
To sooth his care, and, free from noise and strife,
Conduct him gently to the verge of life. Pope.
3. In law
Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seems to have been 12 miles round. Verge hath also another significa-tion, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and, holding it in his hand, sweareth fealty to the lord of a manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge. Cowel.
Fear not; whom we raise,
We will make fast within a hallow'd verge. Shakesp.

To VE'RGE v. n. [vergo, Lat.] To tend; to bend downwards.
They serve indifferently for vowels in respect of the aperture, and for consonants in respect of the near appulse, and so much the more verging either way, according to the respective occasions. Holder.
The nearer I find myself verging to that period of life which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left. Swift
Such are indicated, when the juices of a human body verge to putrefaction. Arbuthnot.
Man,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not the whole. Pope.

VE'RGER. n. f. [from verge.] He that carries the mace before the dean.
I can keep the verger with half a crown, and get into the [illegible]

VERI'DICAL adj. [veridicus, Latin.] Telling truth. Dict.

To VE'RIFY. v. n. [verifier, Fr.] To justify against charge of falsehood, to confirm, to prove true.
What seemeth to have been uttered concerning sermons, and their efficacy or necessity, in regard of divine matter, must consequently be verified in sundry other kinds of teaching, if the matter be the same in all. Hooker.
This is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever [illegible]ed by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored. Bacon.
So shalt thou best fulfil, best verify
The prophets old, who sung thy endless reign. Milton
So spake this oracle, then verify'd,
When Jesus, son of Mary, second Eve,
Saw Satan fall. Milton's Par. Lost.
Though you may mistake a year;
Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be verify'd at last. Swift
[illegible] shall have three kings, which is now wonderfully verified; for besides the king of Portugal, there are now two rivals for Spain. Swift's Merlin's Prophecy

VE'RILY adj [from very]
1. In truth: certainly
Verily 'tis better to be low[illegible]

With great confidence.

It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavourers of that voyage, the enterprize had succeeded. Bacon.

By representing the sacraments as, we are verily persuaded the consequence will be an entire alteration of religion among us. Swift on the Sacrament.

VERISI'MILAR. adj. [verisimilis, Latin.] Probable; likely.

VERISIMILITUDE. } n. f. [verisimilitude, Latin.] Probability;
VERISIMILITY. } likelihood, resemblance of truth

Touching the verisimility or probable truth of this relation, several reasons seem to overthrow it. Brown.

A noble nation, upon whom if not such verities, at least such verisimilitudes of virtue were placed. Brown's Vul. Er.

Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase, but true knowledge is dear and difficult. Like a point, it requires an access to its discovery; while verisimilitude, like the expanded superficies, is obvious, sensible, and affords a large and easy field for loose enquiry. Glanville.

The plot, the wit, the characters, the passions, are exalted as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimility. Dryden's Essay on Dramatick Poetry.

Though Horace gives permission to painters and poets to dare every things, yet he encourages neither to make things out of meer and verisimility. Dryden.

VERITABLE. adj. [veritable, Fr.] True; agreeable to fact.

Indeed! is't true?

—— Most veritable, therefore look to't well. Shakesp.

The presage of the year succeeding made from insects in oak-apples, is I doubt too antithetick, nor veritable from event. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

VERITY. n. f. [verité, Fr. veritas, Latin.]

1. Truth; consonance to the reality of things.

If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of religion established, let them believe God himself thus miraculously working for it. Hooker.

I saw their weapons drawn, there was a noise;
That's verity. Shakespeare's Tempest.

The precipitancy of disputation, and the fire and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity, its calm information can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whisper among a croud of sailors in a storm.

It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty. South.

2. A true assertion; a true tenet.

And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity. Sidney.

Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleaseth God, of his gracious goodness, to instil that celestial verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls. Hooker.

If there come truth from them,
Why by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well? Shakesp.
Must virtue be preserved by a lie?
Virtue and truth do ever best agree,
By this it seems to be a verity,
Since the effects so good and virtuous be. Davies.

3. Moral truth, agreement of the words with the thoughts.

VERJUICE. n. f. [verjus, French.] Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced varges.

Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love verjuice. L'Estrange.

The barley-pudding comes in place.
Then bids fall on; himself, for saving charges,
A peel'd mice'd onion eats, and apples verjuice. Irons.
The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd
Through th' infix'd graff, a grateful mixture forms
Of tart and sweet. Philips.

The fairest and most principal red is vermilion, called in Latin minium: it is a poison, and found where great store of quicksilver is. Peacham.

3. Any beautiful red colour.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermilion,
Like crimson dy'd in grain Spenser.
There grew a goodly tree him fair beside,
Loaden with fruit and apples rosie red,
As they in pure vermilion had been dy'd,
Whereof great virtues over all were read. Fairy Queen.

Simple colours are strong and sensible, though they are clear as vermilion. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To VE'RMILION. v. a. [from the noun.] To dye red.

A sprightly red vermilions all her face,
And her eyes languish with unusual grace.

VERMINE. n. f. [Vermine, Fr. vermis, Lat.] Any noxious animal. Used commonly for small creatures.

— How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin. Shakesp.

The head of a wolf, dried and hanged up in a dove-house, will scare away vermin, such as weazels and polecats. Bacon.

An idle person only lives to spend his time, and eat the fruits of the earth, like a vermin or a wolf. Taylor.

The stars determine
You are my prisoners, base vermin. Hudibras.

A weazle taken in a trap, was charg'd with misdemeanors, and the poor vermin stood much upon her innocence. L'Estr.

Great injuries these vermin, mice and rats, do in the field. Mortimer's Husbandry.

He that has so little wit
To nourish vermin, may be bit. Swift.

To VE'RMINATE. v. n. [from vermin.] To breed vermine.

VERMINATION. n. f. [from verminate.] Generation of vermine.

Redi discarding anomalous generation, tried experiments relating to the vermination of serpents and fish. Derham.

VE'RMINOUS. adj. [from vermine.] Tending to vermine, disposed to breed vermine.

A wasting of children's flesh depends upon some obstruction of the entrails, or verminous disposition of the body. Harvey.

VERMIPAROUS. adj. [vermis and pario, Lat.] Producing worms.

— they confound the generation of vermiparous and [illegible] with oviparous. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

VERNA'CULAR. adj. [vernaculus, Latin.] Native, of one's own country.

London weekly bills number deep in consumptions; the same likewise proving inseparable accidents to most other diseases; which instances do evidently bring a consumption under the notion of a vernacular disease to England. Harvey.

The histories of all our former wars are transmitted to us in our vernacular idiom. I do not find in any of our chronicles, that Edward the third ever reconnoitered the enemy, though he often discovered the posture of the French, and as often vanquished them. Addison.

VE'RNAL. adj. [vernus, Latin.] Belonging to the spring.

With the year
Seasons return, but not to me returns,

Behold where age's wretched victim lies;
See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes. Prior.

VICTOR. n. ſ. [victor, Lat.] Conqueror; vanquiſher; he that gains the advantage in any conteſt. Victor is ſeldom uſed with a genitive, and never but with regard to ſome ſingle action or perſon. We rarely ſay Alexander was victor of Darius, though we ſay he was victor at Arbela; but we never ſay he was victor of Perſia.

This ſtrange race more ſtrange concents did yield,
Who victor ſeem'd, was to his ruin brought;
Who ſeem'd o'erthrown, was miſtreſs of the field. Sidney.
Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind,
Both tugging to be victors, breaſt to breaſt,
Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Shakeſp.
Although the victor, we ſubmit to Ceſar. Shakeſp.
Say where and when
Their fight, what ſtroke ſhall bruiſe the victor's heel. Milt.
Our Hebrew ſongs and harps in Babylon,
That pleas'd ſo well our victors ear, declare
That rather Greece from us theſe arts deriv'd. Milton.
Their hearts at laſt the vanquiſh'd re-aſſume,
And now the victors fail. Denham.
In love the victors from the vanquiſh'd fly;
They fly that wound, and they purſue that die. Waller.
Fortune's unjuſt, ſhe ruins oft the brave,
And him who ſhould be victor, makes the ſlave. Dryden.
Loſe not a thought on me, I'm out of danger,
Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand. Dryden.

VICTO'RIOUS. adj. [victorieux, Fr.]

1. Conquering; having obtained conqueſt; ſuperiour in conteſt.

Victory doth more often fall by errour of the vanquiſhed, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.
The great ſon return'd victorious with his ſaints. Milton.
That happy ſun, ſaid he, will riſe again,
Who twice victorious did our navy ſee:
And I alone muſt view him riſe in vain,
Without one ray of all his ſtar for me. Dryden.

2. Producing conqueſt.

Sudden theſe honours ſhall be ſnatch'd away,
And curs'd for ever this victorious day. Pope.

3. Betokening conqueſt.

VICTORY. n. ſ. [victoria, Lat.] Conqueſt; ſucceſs in conteſt; triumph.

At his nurſe's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages bluſh'd at him. Shakeſp.
Then to the heav'n of heav'ns he ſhall aſcend
With victory, triumphing o'er his foes. Milton.

Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exerciſed in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification and ſelf-denial, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourſelves. It is a great inſtance of a victory over the moſt refractory paſſions. Taylor.

VI'CTRESS. n. ſ. [from victor.] A female that conquers.

I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
And ſhe ſhall be ſole victreſs, Cæſar's Cæſar. Shakeſp.

VI'CTUAL. } n. ſ. [victuailles, Fr. vittuaglia, Ital.] Proviſion
VI'CTUALS } of food, ſtores for the ſupport of life, meat, ſuſtenance.

He landed in theſe iſlands, to furniſh himſelf with victuals and freſh water. Abbot's Deſcrip. of the World.

She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all Pope.

UNLOOSABLE. adj [A word rarely used.] Not to be loosed.

Whatever may be said of the unloosable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies, that need no other cement to unite them, than the juxta-position, and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might dissipate them, are excluded. Boyle.

To UNLOOSE. v. a. To loose. A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation, so that to unloose, is properly to bind.

York, unloose your long imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shakespeare.

The weak, wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold,
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida

Turn him to any cause of policy;
The gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter Shakesp. Hen. V.

What noise? that spirit's possess'd with haste,
That wounds th' unresisting postern with these strokes. Sha.
The sheep was sacrificed on no pretence,
But meek and unresisting innocence
Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heavens, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones, occur, they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impress'd. Bentley's Sermons.

UNRESOLVABLE. adj. Not to be solved, insoluble.
For a man to run headlong, where his ruin stares him in the face; still to press on to the embraces of sin, as a [illegible] them unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin infatuates before it destroys. South's Sermons

I. Not determined, having made no resolution.
On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shakesp.
Turnus, unresolv'd of flight,
Moves tardy back, and just recedes from fight. Dryden

Wise beheld, those creeping flames by reason to subdue,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest. Fairy Queen.
Repose, sweet god, for their unrest,
That have their alms out of the empress' chest. Shakespeare
Dismay'd confusion all possess'd,
Th' afflicted troop, hearing their plot descry'd
Then runs amaz'd distress, with sad unrest,
To this, to that, to fly, to stand, to hide. Daniel.
Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrows best,
For deepest wounds, can least their feelings tell;
Yet, let me borrow from mine own unrest,
But time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewel. Wotton.
Up they rose,
As from unrest; and each the other viewing,
Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds

UNRESTORED. adj.

'Tis hard to reconcile. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Soon as th' unwelcome news
From earth arrived at heaven-gate, displeased
All were who heard. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

Though he that brings unwelcome news
Has but a loathing office, yet he that shews
Your danger first, and then your way to safety,
May heal that wound he made. Denham's Sophy.

Forced from her presence, and condemn'd to live;
Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve. Dryden.

From the very first instances of perception, some things are grateful, and others unwelcome to them; some things that they incline to, and others that they fly. Locke.

Such hasty nights as these, would give very unwelcome interruptions to our labours. Bentley's Sermons.

UNWE'PT. adj. Not lamented; not bemoaned.

Our fathers's distress was left unmoan'd,
Your widow dolours likewise be unwept. Shakesp. Rich. III.

We, but the slaves that mount you to the throne:
A base, ignoble crowd, without a name;
Unwept, unworthy of the fun'ral flame;
By duty bound to foretel each his fate. Dryden.

UNWE'T. adj. Not moist.

Once I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwet;
Yet since I have thee here in narrow room,
My tears shall set thee first afloat within thy tomb. Dryden.

UNWHI'PT. adj. Not punished; not corrected with the rod.

Tremble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipt of justice. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Unwieldily they wallow first in ooze;
Then in the shady covert seek repose. Dryden

UNWI'ELDINESS. n. s. Heaviness, difficulty to move, or be moved.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdenous corpulence my love had grown,
But that I made it feed upon
That which love worst endures, discretion. Donne.

The supposed unwieldiness of so massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses. Glanville.

UNWI'ELDY adj. Unmanageable, not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.

An ague, meeting many humours in a fat, unwieldy body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits, carried him out of the world. Clarendon.

Part, huge of bulk!
Wallowing unwieldly, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.

Unwieldy sums of wealth, which higher mount,
Than sics of marshal'd figures can account. Dryden.

Nothing here th' unwieldy rock avails,
Rebounding harmless from the plated scales,
That, firmly join'd, preserv'd him from a wound,
With native armour crusted all around. Addison's Ovid.

What carriage can bear away all the rude and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts's Impr. of the Mind.

UNWI'LLING. adj. Loath; not contented; not inclined, not complying by inclination.

Unwillingly they made him great: but now,
Being his friends, ſhall willingly undo him. Denham.

The dire contagion ſpreads ſo faſt,
That where it ſeizes, all relief is vain,
And therefore muſt unwillingly lay waſte
That country, which would raiſe the foe maintain. Dryden.

[illegible] bedience, with profeſſed unwillingneſs to obey, is no better [illegible]

What moved the man to yield to her perſuaſions? Even the ſame cauſe that hath moved all men ſince, an unwillingneſs to grieve her, and make her ſad, leſt ſhe ſhould pine, and be overcome with ſorrow Raleigh's Hiſt. of the World.

I ſee with what unwillingneſs
You lay upon me this command, and through your fears
Diſcern your love, and therefore muſt obey you. Denham.

There is in moſt people a reluctance and unwillingneſs to be forgotten. We obſerve even among the vulgar, how fond they are to have an inſcription over their grave. Swift.

To UNWI'ND v. a. pret. and part. paſſive unwound.

1. To ſeparate any thing convolved; to untwiſt; to untwine.

All his ſubjects having by ſome years learned, ſo to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it ſhould have needed a ſtronger virtue than his, to have unwound ſo deeply an entered vice. Sidney, b. ii.

Empirick politicians uſe deceit
To wind themſelves into a buſineſs,
You boldly ſhew that ſkill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end;
Which ſhould you veil, we might unwind the clue,
As men do nature, till we came to you Dryden.

2. To diſentangle; to looſe from entanglement.

Deſiring to ſerve God as they ought; but being not ſo skilful as in every point to unwind themſelves, where the ſnares of gloſing ſpeech lie to entangle them, are in [illegible] not a little troubled, when they hear ſo bitter invectives againſt that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy Hooker, b. v.

As you unwind her love from him,
Leſt it ſhould ravel, and be good to none,
You muſt reſtore it on me. Shakeſp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Thou waſt inſtalled. Shakeſp. Hen. VI.

Fearing leſt my jealous aim might err,
And ſo unworthily diſgrace the man,
I gave him gentle looks. Shakeſpeare.

If we look upon the Odyſſey as all a fiction, we conſider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a ſtory founded upon truth, adorned with embelliſhments of poetry. Broome.

UNWO'RTHINESS. n. ſ. Want of worth; want of merit.

A mind fearing the unworthineſs of every word that ſhould be preſented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner. Sidney, b. ii.

O let not an excellent thing do itself such wrong, as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness, since the weakest mist is not easier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with so high thoughts:

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us
To chide him from our eaves, for he persists. Shakespeare.

I fear'd to find you in another place;
But, since you're here, my jealousy grows less.
You will be kind to my unworthiness. Dryden.

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some. Wake on Death.

UNWO'RTHY. adj.

1. Not deserving.

The Athanasian creed and doxology should remain in use, the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard sounding, as they are in the church of Christ. Hooker.

Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I willingly pass over. Knolles.

If the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vomica, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema, because the vomica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the purulent matter, and mix it with blood A Botanist on Diet.

[illegible]

Vomick nut is the nucleus of a fruit of an East Indian tree, the wood of which is the lignum colubrinum, or snakewood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown-piece. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds, and taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill's Mat Medica.

To VOMIT. v. n. [vomo, Latin.]

1. To cast up the contents of the stomach.

The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his grass, vomits, and is well. More

To VOMIT. v. a. [vomir, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stomach.

Hast thou found honey? eat so much as is sufficient, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it. Prov. xxv. 16.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. Jonah ii.

Vomiting is of use, when the foulness of the stomach requires it. Wiseman's Surgery.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar.

To throw up with violence from any hollow.

VOMIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

2. An emetick medicine, a medicine that causes vomit.

Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances; if there be any symptoms of an inflammation of the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbuth.

VOMITION. n. s. [from vomo, Lat.] The act or power of vomiting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their destruction, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grew's Cosmology.

VOMITIVE adj. [vomitif, Fr.] Emetick; causing vomit.

VOMITORY adj. [vomitoire, Fr. vomitorius, Lat.] Procuring vomits, emetick.

Since regulus of antimony, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitory operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, short, blunt pins, which, by straining, they vomit up again, or by taking vomitories privately. Harvey on Consumptions.

VORACIOUS, adj. [vorace, Fr. vorax, Lat.]

1. Greedy to eat, ravenous, edacious.

So voracious is this humour grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Government of the Tongue.

VORACIOUSLY. adv. [from voracious.] Greedily, ravenously.

VORACIOUSNESS. } n. s. [voracité, Fr, voracitas, Lat. from vo-
VORACITY. } racious.] Greediness; ravine, ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth pamper their voracities. Sandys.

Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham's Physico-Theology.

VORTEX. n. s. In the plural vortices [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these, and all their parts would, by their tenacity and stiffness, communicate their motion to one another. Newton's Opticks.

Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets. Bentley's Sermons.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her power confess. Pope.

VORTICAL adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be turned about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton's Opticks.

It is not a magnetical power, nor the effect of a vortical motion; those common attempts towards the explication of gravity. Bentley's Sermons.

VOTARIST. n. s. [devotus, Lat.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship, votary.

I wish a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of St. Clare. Shakespeare.

Earth, yield me roots! What is here?
Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold!
No, gods, I am no idle votarist. Shakespeare.

The grey-hooded ev'n,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

VOTARY. n. s. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee?
Thou art a votary to fond desire. Shakespeare.

Thou, faint god of sleep, forget that I
Was ever known to be thy votary.
No more my pillow shall thine altar be,
Nor will I offer any more to thee,
Myself a melting sacrifice. Crashaw.

By these means, men worship the idols have been set up in their minds, and stamp the characters of divinity upon absurdities and errors, become zealous votaries to dolls and monkies. Locke.

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries, among those who are called by the name of the son of God. Rogers's Sermons.

How can heav'nly wisdom prove
An instrument to earthly love?
Know'st thou not yet, that men commence
Thy votaries for want of sense. Swift.

VOTARY adj. Consequent to a vow.

Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bac.

VOTARESS. n. s. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial votaress passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakespeare.

His mother was a votaress of my order;
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakespeare.

No rosary this votaress needs,
Her very syllables are beads. Cleaveland.

Thy votaress from my tender years I am;
And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game. Dryden.

What force have pious vows? the queen of love

VOTE n. s. [votum, Lat.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.

Let questions intricate with delight,
Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes. Roscommon.

How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the supposed honesty or learning of those of the same profession? as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude. Locke.

The final determination arises from the majority of opinions or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be sway'd by the superior weight of reason. Watts.

To VOTE. v. a.

1. To chuse by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.

You are not only in the eye and ear of your master; but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and so are in his bosom also; the world hath also voted you, and doth so esteem of you. Bacon.

2. To give by vote.

The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds by way of recompence for their sufferings. Swift.

VOTER. n. s. [from vote.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Elections growing chargeable, the voters, that is, the bulk of the common people, have been universally seduced into bribery, perjury, drunkenness, malice, and slander. Swift.

He hates an action base;
Can sometimes drop a voter's claim,
And give up party to his fame. Swift.

VOTIVE. adj. [votivus, Lat.] Given by vow.

Such in Isis' temple you may find,
On votive tablets to the life pourtray'd. Dryden.

Venus take my votive glass,
Since I am not what I was,
What from this day I shall be,
Venus! let me never see. Prior.

To VOUCH. v. a. [voucher, Norman French.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest.

The sun and day are witnesses for me;
Let him who fights unseen relate his own,
And vouch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden.

2. To attest; to warrant; to maintain.

You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold
That is not often vouched, while 'tis making
'Tis given with welcome. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The consistency of the discourse, and the pertinency of it to the design he is upon, vouches it worthy of our great apostle. Duke.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it. Atterbury.

To VOUCH v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness, to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe her, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so solemnly affirmed. Swift.

VOUCH. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Warrant; atteſtation.

What praiſe couldſt thou beſtow on a deſerving woman indeed? one that in the authority of her merit, did juſtly put on the vouch of very malice itſelf? Shakeſp. Othello

VO'UCHER. n. ſ. [from vouch.] One who gives witneſs to any thing.

Better to ſtarve,
Than crave the hire which firſt we do deſerve:
Why in this wolviſh gown ſhould I ſtand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needleſs voucher? Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

The ſtamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of ſuch denomination is of ſuch a weight, and of ſuch a fineneſs, i. e. has ſo much ſilver in it. Locke.

All the great writers of that age ſtand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator, N°. 253.

I have added nothing to the malice or abſurdity of them, which it behoves me to declare, ſince the vouchers themſelves will be ſo ſoon loſt. Pope.

To VOUCHSA'FE. v. a. [vouch and ſafe.]

1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.
2. To condeſcend to grant.

He grew content to mark their ſpeeches, then marvel at ſuch wit in ſhepherds, after to uſe their company, and laſtly to vouchſafe converſe. Sidney.

Shall I vouchſafe your worſhip a word or two?——
——Two thouſand, fair woman, and I'll Vouchſafe thee hearing. Shakeſpeare.

But if the ſenſe of touch ſeem ſuch delight
Beyond all other, think the ſame vouchſaf'd
To cattle and each beaſt Milton.

It is not ſaid by the apoſtle, that God vouchſafed to the heathens the means of ſalvation; and yet I will not affirm that God will ſave none of thoſe, to whom the ſound of the goſpel never reached. South's Sermons.

To VOUCHSA'FE. v. n. To deign; to condeſcend; to yield.

Do I not ſee Zelmane, who does not think a thought which is not firſt weigh'd by wiſdom and virtue? doth not ſhe vouchſafe to love me with like ardour? Sidney, b. ii.

Vouchſafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of theſe ſuppoſed crimes to give me leave
By circumſtance but to acquit myſelf. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

Vouchſafe, illuſtrious Ormond, to behold
What pow'r the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.

VOUCHSA'FEMENT. n. ſ. [from vouchſafe.] Grant; condeſcenſion.

The infinite ſuperiority of God's nature, places a vaſt diſparity betwixt his greateſt communicated vouchſafements, and his boundleſs, and therefore to his creatures incommunicable perfections. Boyle.

VOW. n. ſ. [vœu, Fr votum, Lat.]

1. Any promiſe made to a divine power; an act of devotion, by which ſome part of life, or ſome part of poſſeſſions is conſecrated to a particular purpoſe.

The gods are deaf to hot and peeviſh vows;

If you take that vow and that wiſh to be all one, you are miſtaken; a wiſh is a far lower degree than a vow. Hammond.

She vows for his return, with vain devotion, pays. Dryd.

2. A ſolemn promiſe, commonly uſed for a promiſe of love or marriage.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women ſpoke. Shakeſpeare.

Thoſe who wear the woodbine on their brow,
Were knights of love, who never broke their vow;
Firm to their plighted faith. Dryden.

To VOW. v. a. [vouer, Fr vovere, Lat.] To conſecrate by a ſolemn dedication; to give to a divine power.

David often voweth unto God the ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving in the congregation. Hooker.

To Maſter Harvey, upon ſome ſpecial conſideration, I have vowed this my labour. Spenſer.

Vow and pay unto the Lord. Pſ. lxx.

When we have not only vowed, but delivered them over into the poſſeſſion of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his publick worſhip, and the miniſters thereof, they are not now arbitrable, nor to be revoked. Sprinan

Whoever ſees theſe irreligious men,
With burden of a ſickneſs, weak and faint,
But hears them taking of religion then,
And vowing of their ſoul to every ſaint. Davies

This plant Latinus, when his town he wall'd,
Then found, and from the tree Laurentum call'd:
And laſt, in honour of his new abode,
He vow'd the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden.

To VOW. v. n. To make vows or ſolemn promiſes.

Doſt ſee how unregarded now
That piece of beauty paſſes?
There was a time, when I did vow
To that alone: but mark the fate of faces. Suckling

VO'WEL. n. ſ. [voyelle, Fr vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered alone.

Engliſh letters are vowels and conſonants, yet not wholly upon their reaſon, that a vowel may be ſounded alone, a conſonant not without a vowel; which will not be found all true; for many of the conſonants may be ſounded alone, and ſome joined together without a vowel, as bl ſt. and as we pronounce the latter by nature of people, riſſle. Holder.

Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elſion. Broome.

VO'WFELLOW. n. ſ. [vow and fellow.] One bound by the ſame vow.

Who are the votaries,

This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage, contented to ſit in the cabin when the winds were allay'd, but ready to reſume the helm when the ſtorm aroſe. Prior.

2. Courſe, attempt; undertaking. A low phraſe.

If he ſhou'd intend his voyage towards my wife, I wou'd turn her ſoole to him, and what he gets more of her than ſharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakeſpeare.

If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail, I am no further your enemy. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

3. The practice of travelling.

All nations have uſed knowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or ſtrangers that come to them Bacon.

To VO'YAGE. v. n. [voyager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel by ſea.

For voyaging to learn the dreadful art,
To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart,
Ilus refus'd t'impart the baneful truſt. Pope's Odyſſey.

To VO'YAGE. v. a. To travel; to paſs over.

I with pain
Voyag'd th' unreal, vaſt, unbounded deep
Of horrible confuſion. Milton's Par. Loſt.

VO'YAGER. n. ſ. [voyageur, Fr. from voyage.] One who travels by ſea.

Diſdain not in thy conſtant travelling
To do as other voyagers, and make
Some turns into leſs creeks, and wiſely take Freſh water at the Heliconian ſpring. Donne.

How comfortable this is, voyagers can beſt tell. Cheyne.

Deny your veſſels, ye deny in vain,
A private voyager I paſs the main. Pope's Odyſſey.

I am ready to die from my youth up. Ps. lxxxviii.

14. Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.

Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands when the tide is low. Addison.

15 Up and down. Backward and forward.

Our debate is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth. Hooker, b. v.

The skipping king he rambled up and down,
With shallow jesters Shakespeare.

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a feigning blow, now strikes again
Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then ends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on amain. Daniel.

Thou and death
Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
Wing silently the buxom air Milton.

On this windy sea of land, the fiend
Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey. Milton.

What a miserable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run starving up and down thus in woods. L'Estrange.

She moves! life wanders up and down
Through all her face, and lights up every charm. Addison.

16. Up to. To an equal height with.

Tantalus was punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water, that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink it. Addison.

17. Up to. Adequately to.

The wisest men in all ages have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.

They are determined to live up to the holy rule, by which they have obliged themselves to walk. Atterbury.

We must not only mortify all these passions that solicit us, but we must learn to do well, and act up to the positive precepts of our duty. Rogers's Sermons.

18 Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.

She, quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wise:

19. It is added to verbs, implying some accumulation, or increase.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms that settled in every part of the Campania of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any six parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

20. Up, interject.

21. A word exhorting to rise from bed.

Up, up! cries gluttony, 'tis break of day;
Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey. Pope.

22. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.

Up then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of mine;
Such cause of mourning never hadst afore.
Up, grisly ghosts; and up my rueful rime;
Matter of mirth now shalt thou have no more. Spenser.

But up, and enter now into full bliss. Milton.

Up, up, for honour's sake, twelve legions wait you,
And long to call you chief. Dryden.

Up. prep. From a lower to a higher part; not down

In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary, in going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.

To Upbear. v. a. preter. upbore; part. pass. upborn. [up and bear]

1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.

Upborn with indefatigable wings. Milton.

Rang'd in a line the ready racers stand,
Start from the goal, and vanish o'er the strand:
Swift as on wings of wind, upborn they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope.

2. To raise aloft

This with pray'r,
Or one short sigh of human breath, upborn,
Ev'n to the seat of God. Milton's Par. Lost.

A monstrous wave upbore
The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore. Pope.

Vital pow'rs 'gan wax both weak and wan,
For want of food and sleep, which two upbear,
Like weighty pillars, this frail life of man. Fairy Queen.

To Upbraid. v. a.

1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful.

The fathers, when they were upbraided with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most gracious nature, who did not therefore the less accept of a hearty affection. Hooker.

It seem'd in me
But as an honour snatch'd with boist'rous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances,
Which daily grew to quarrel. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

If you refuse your aid, yet do not
Upbraid us with our distress. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Vain man! how long wilt thou thy God upbraid?
And, like the roaring of a furious wind,
Thus vent the vile distemper of thy mind? Sandys.

How cunningly the sorceress displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me more. Milton.

'Tis a general complaint against you, and I must upbraid you with it, that because you need not write, you will not. Dryden.

You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by nature are unmade,
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear. Blackmore.

2. To object as matter of reproach.

Those that have been bred together, are more apt to envy their equals when raised; for it doth upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them. Bacon.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge or [illegible] them those small remains [illegible] piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left. Sprat.

And downward fiſh. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. i.

4. More than; with tendency to a higher or greater number

Their counſel muſt ſeem very unſeaſonable, who adviſe men now to ſuſpect that, wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance and upwards, enough to take away ſuſpicion. Hooker, b. v.

I have been your wife in this obedience
Upward of twenty years; and have been bleſt
With many children by you. Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.

5. Towards the ſource.

Be Homer's works your ſtudy,
Thence form your judgment, thence your notions bring,
And trace the muſes upward to their ſpring. Pope.

To UPWIND. v. a. pret. and paſſ. upwound. [up and wind.] To convolve

As ſhe lay upon the dirty ground,
Her huge long tail her den all overſpread,
Yet was in knots and many boughts upwound. Fa. Queen.

URBA'NITY. n. ſ. [urbanité, Fr urbanitas, Lat.] Civility, elegance, politeneſs, merriment; facetiouſneſs.

Raillery is the ſauce of civil entertainment; and without ſome ſuch tincture of urbanity, good humour falters. L'Eſtr.

Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-mannered wit, conſtitute the Roman ſtage Dryden.

U'RCHIN. n. ſ. [heureuchon, Armorick, ericaceus, Lat.]

1. A hedge-hog.

Urchins ſhall, for that vaſt of night that they may work,
All exerciſe on thee. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.
A thouſand fiends, a thouſand hiſſing ſnakes,
Ten thouſand ſwelling toads, as many urchins,
Would make ſuch fearful and confuſed cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,
Would ſtraight fall mad Shakeſp. Titus Andronicus.

That nature deſigns the preſervation of the more infirm creatures, by the defenſive armour it hath given them, is demonſtrable in the common hedge-hog, or urchin. Ray.

2. A name of ſlight anger to a child

Pleas'd Cupid heard, and check'd his mother's pride:
And who's blind now, mamma? the urchin cry'd.
'Tis Chloe's eye, and cheek, and lip, and breaſt
Fond Howard's genius fancy'd all the reſt. Pr.

URE. n. ſ. Practice; uſe; habit. Obſolete.

Is the warrant ſufficient for any man's conſcience to build ſuch proceedings upon, as are and have been put in ure for the eſtabliſhment of that cauſe? Hooker.

He would keep his hand in ure with ſomewhat of greater value, till he was brought to juſtice. L'Eſtrange.

URETERS n. ſ. [uretères, Fr.] Two canals or paſſages from the baſon of the kidnies, one on each ſide. U'SAGE. n. ſ. [uſage, Fr.]

1. Treatment.

Which way
Might'ſt thou deſerve, or they impoſe this uſage,
Coming from us? Shakeſp. K. Lear.

The luſtre in your eye, heav'n in your cheek
Plead you fair uſage. Shakeſp. Troil. and Creſſida.

My brother
Is priſoner to the biſhop, at whoſe hands
He hath good uſage, and great liberty Shakeſp. Hen. VI.

What uſage have I met with from this adverſary, who paſſes by the very words I tranſlated, and produces other paſſages; and then hectors and cries out of my diſingenuity. St. I

Are not hawks brought to the hand, and to the lure, and lions reclaimed by good uſage? L'Eſtrange

Neptune took unkindly to be bound,
And Lotus never ſuch hard uſage found
In his Ægean priſon. Dryden.

2. Cuſtom, practice long continued.

Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
Out of his grave. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

All fountains of the deep
Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation rise
Above the highest hills. Milton.

Farewell court,
Where vice not only hath usurpt the place,
But the reward, and even the name of virtue. Id.

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threat'ning floods and inundations near:
If so, a just reprize would only be
Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.

Who next usurps, will a just prince appear,
So much your ruin will his reign endear. Dryden.

... urge in vain, impatient of her load,
And labouring underneath the proud rous God,
The more she strove to shake him from her breast
With more and far superior force he prest,
Commands his entrance, and, without control,
Usurps her organs, and inspires her soul
Who's this, that dares usurp
The guards and habit of No-head a prince?

USURPA'TION [usurpation, Fr. from usurp] ... illegal seizure or possession

The Pierces,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne.
Succeeding kings recovery of their right from unjust usurpation, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. K. Charles I.

O baseness to support a tyrant throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!
Nay, to become a part of usurpation,
To espouse the tyrant's person and her crimes. Dryden

Whatever opposition was made to the usurpation of K. ...

USU'RPER. n. s. [from usurp] One who seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.

Ever sithence he hath continued his first usurped power, and now exacteth upon all men what he list: so that now to subdue or expel an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise, but a restitution of ancient right unto the crown. Spenser.

Richard duke of York,
Was rightful heir unto the English crown,
And that your majesty was an usurper

But this usurper, his encroachment proud,
Stays not on man; to God his tow'r intends
Siege and defiance Milton.

Few usurpers to the shades descend
...
He griev'd, that land he freed should be oppress'd,
And he less for it than usurpers are. Dryden.

WATER. n. ſ. [water, Dutch; peter, Saxon.]

1. Sir Iſaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid ſalt, volatile, and void of all ſavour or taſte, and it ſeems to conſiſt of ſmall, ſmooth, hard, porous, ſpherical particles, of equal diameters, and of equal ſpecifick gravities, as Dr. Cheyne obſerves; and alſo that there are between them ſpaces ſo large, and ranged in ſuch a manner, as to be pervious on all ſides. Their ſmoothneſs accounts for their ſliding eaſily over one another's ſurfaces: their ſphericity keeps them alſo from touching one another in more points than one; and by both theſe their frictions in ſliding over one another, is rendered the leaſt poſſible. Their hardneſs accounts for the incompreſſibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The poroſity of water is ſo very great, that there is at leaſt forty times as much ſpace as matter in it, for water is nineteen times ſpecifically lighter than gold, and conſequently rarer in the ſame proportion. Quincy

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears. Shak. H. VI.
Your water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body

They cannot find that path which first was shown,
But wander to and fro in ways unknown,
Furthest from end then, when they nearest ween. Fa. Queen.
Thy father, in pity of thy hard distress,
Levy'd an army, weening to redeem
And reft from me the [illegible] Shakesp. Henry VI
I ween you of better luck,
I mean, in periur'd witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, while here he liv'd
Upon this naughty earth. Shak. Henry VIII.
They ween'd
That self-same day, by fight or by surprize,
To win the mount of God; and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer, but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain Milton.

To WEEP v. n. preter. and part. pass. wept, wepen. [peopan, Saxon.]

1. To shew sorrow by tears.
[illegible] that fair time
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear,
And what these sorrows could not thence exhale,
That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping. Sonn.
I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmannerly sadness in his youth. Shakesp.
The days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.
Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it? Taylor.
Away, with women weep, and leave me here,
Fix'd, like a man, to die without a tear,
Or save, or slay us both. Dryden.
A corpse it was, but whose it was, unknown;
Yet mov'd, however, she made the case her own;
Took the ornaments of a shipwreck'd man,
As for a stranger wept Dryden.
When Darius wept over his army, that within a few days after not a man of all that confluence would be left alive, Artabanus reproved his lamentation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with so many evils, that every one should wish himself dead long before. Hale's Preparation for Death.
This lovely weeping fair cannot be dearer to thee,
Than thou art to thy faithful Scofrid. [illegible]

To wash his wounds, to weep his obsequies. Dryden.
We wand'ring go
Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe. Pope.

2. To shed moisture.
Thus was this place
A happy rural seat of various view,
Groves whose rich trees wept odorous gums and balm.
Let others boast their parts, nor envy we
The weeping amber or the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

3. To abound with wet.
Rey-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds. Mortimer.

WEEPER n. s. [from weep.]

1. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bewailer, a mourner
If you have served God in a holy life, send away the women and the weeper: tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much. If thou art alone, or with fitting company, die as thou should'st, but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap. Taylor.

Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,
What flore of brine supply'd the weeper's eyes. Dryden.

2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.

WE'ERISH. adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Ascham in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to rafters, it means insipid, applied to the body, weak and washy: here it seems to mean sour; surly.

A voice not soft, weak, pipping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a countenance not weerish and crabbed, but fair and comely. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

To WEET. v. n. preterite wot, or wote. [pitan, Saxon; weten, Dutch.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge. Obsolete.

Him the prince with gentle court did board;
Sir knight, mought I of you this court'sy read,
To weet why on your shield, so goodly scor'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head? Spenser.

I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weet
We stand up peerless. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

1. That of which the claim is generally waved, any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manour.

His horse, it is the herald's weft,
No, 'tis a mare. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.

2. It is in Bacon for waft, a gentle blast.

The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest sort of smells are best in a weft afar off. Bac.

WEFT. n. f. [peppa, Saxon.] The woof of cloth.

WE'FTAGE. n. f. [from weft.] Texture.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grew's Musæum.

To WEIGH. v. a [pezan, Saxon; wayen, Dutch.]

1. To examine by the balance.

Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved, so as not to be wet nor wasted, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous, 'till the river cometh to its height. Bacon's Natural History.

Th' eternal hung forth his golden scales,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton.

2. To be equivalent to in weight

By the exsuction of the air out of a glass-vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.

3. To pay, allot, or take by weight

They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, and all my comforts are, far hence. Shakespeare.

They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Zech. xi.

4. To raise; to take up the anchor.

Barbarossa, using this exceeding cheerfulness of his soldiers, weighed up the fourteen gallies he had sunk. Knolles.

His parting kiss, and there his anchor weigh'd. Dryden.

5. To examine, to balance in the mind.

Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.

I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences. Shak. H. IV.

The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed. Bacon.

You chose a retreat, and not 'till you had maturely weighed the advantages of rising higher, with the hazards of the fall Dryden.

Ah, grant him prudent; prudence interest weighs,
And interest bids him seek your love and praise. Dryden.

The mind, having the power to suspend the satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to examine them on all sides, and weigh them with others. Locke.

He is the only proper judge of our perfections, who weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions Addison's Spectator.

6. To WEIGH down. To overballance.

Fear weighs down faith with shame Daniel's Civ. War.

7. To WEIGH down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.

The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overloaden, weigh down. Bacon.

In thy blood will reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry;
To weigh thy spirits down. Milton.

Her father's crimes
Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers;
A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd,
His children murder'd Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks
The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep Addison's Cato.

Excellent persons, weighed down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach. Addison.

To WEIGH. v. n.

1. To have weight

Exactly weighing and strangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter Brown.

2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.

This object ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.

A wise man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition. Addis.

3. To raise the anchor

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies.
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys, he cries. Dry.

4. To bear heavily; to press hard.

Can'st thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart? Shakesp. Macbeth.

WEIGHED. adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.

In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters. Bacon.

WEIGHER. n. f. [from weigh.] He who weighs.

WEIGHT. n. f. [pihe, Saxon.]

1. Quantity measured by the ballance.

Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon's Natural History.

Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer;
Nature's too kind, and just as too severe:
Speak for us both, and to the balance bring,
On either side, the father and the king
Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee;
Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me. Dryd.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.

Just balances, just weights shall ye have. Lev. xix. 6.

Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money. Arbuthnot on Coins.

When the balance is intirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run intirely into one. Swift.

3. Ponderous mass.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them; otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth: as we see in horseraces, men are curious to forsee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force. Bacon's Natural History.

Wolsey, who from his own great store might have
A palace or a college for his grave,
Lies here interr'd:
Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weight
Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit.
If thus thou lie'st neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee? Bp. Corbet.

All their confidence
Under the weight of mountains bury'd deep. Milton.

Pride, like a gulf, swallows us up, our very virtues, when so heavened, becoming weights and plummets to sink us to the deeper ruin. Government of the Tongue.

Then ſhun the ill; and know, my dear,
Kindneſs and conſtancy will prove
The only pillars fit to bear
So vaſt a weight as that of love. Prior.

4. Gravity; heavineſs; tendency to the center.

Heavineſs or weight is not here conſidered as being ſuch a natural quality, whereby condenſed bodies do of themſelves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be meaſured. Wilkins.

The ſhaft that ſlightly was impreſs'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd,
Drove through his neck. Dryden.

What natural agent impel them ſo ſtrongly with a tranſverſe line blow againſt that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are ſailing? Bentley.

5. Preſſure, burthen; overwhelming power.

So ſhall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning. Milton.

We muſt thoſe, who groan beneath the weight
Of age, diſeaſe, or want, commiſerate. Denham.

The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon the people. L'Eſtrange.

Poſſeſſion's load was grown ſo great,
He ſunk beneath the cumb'rous weight. Swift.

Becauſe the centre of it is above. Dryden.

WE'IGHTY. adj. [from weight.]

1. Heavy, ponderous.

You have already weary'd fortune ſo,
She cannot farther be your friend or foe;
But ſits all breathleſs, and admires to feel
A fate ſo weighty, that it ſtops her wheel. Dryden.

2. Important, momentous, efficacious.

I to your aſſiſtance do make love,
Maſking the buſineſs from the common eye
For ſundry weighty reaſons. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

No fool Pythagoras was thought
Whilſt he his weighty doctrines taught,
He made his liſt'ning ſcholars ſtand,
Their mouth ſtill cover'd with their hand:
Elſe, may-be, ſome rude thinking youth,
Leſs friend to doctrine than to truth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the muſick of the ſpheres. Prior.

Thus ſpoke to my lady the knight full of care,
Let me have your advice in a weighty affair. Swift.

3. Rigorous; ſevere. Not in uſe.

If, after two days ſhine, Athens contains thee,
Attend our weightier judgment. Shakeſp. Timon.

WE'LAWAY. interj. [This I once believed a corruption of weal away, that is, happineſs is gone. ſo Junius explained it; but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, woe on woe: from wealaway, is formed by corruption weladay.] Alas.

Harrow now out, and wealaway, he cried,
What diſmal day hath ſent this curſed light! Spenſer.

Ah, welaway! moſt noble lords, how can
Your cruel eyes endure ſo piteous ſight! Fairy Queen.

Welaway, the while I was ſo fond,
To leave the good that I had in hond. Spenſer

WE'LCOMENESS. n. ſ. [from welcome.] Gratefulneſs.

Our joys, after ſome centuries of years, may ſeem to have grown elder, by having been enjoyed ſo many ages, yet will the [illegible] not be leſs new, nor [illegible] their welcomeneſs, but by their perpetually equal, becauſe infinite, diſtance from a period. Boyle.

WE'LCOMER. n. ſ. [from welcome.] The ſaluter or receiver of a new comer.

Farewel, thou woful welcomer of glory Shakeſpeare

WELD, or Woald. n. ſ. [luteola, Latin.] Yellow weed, a dyers weed.

Its leaves are oblong and entire: it has an anomalous flower, conſiſting of many diſſimilar leaves: the fruit is globular, hollow, and divided into three parts. The dyers uſe it for dying bright yellows and lemon colours; and this is by ſome ſuppoſed to be the plant uſed by the ancient Picts in painting their bodies. Miller.

To WELD, for To wield. Spenſer.

To WELD. v. a. To beat one maſs into another, ſo as to incorporate them.

Sparking or welding heat is uſed when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and ſo weld or work in the doubling into one another. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

WE'LDER. n. ſ. A term perhaps merely Iriſh; though it may be derived from To weald, to turn or manage, whence wielder, welder.

Such immediate tenants have others under them, and ſo a third and fourth in ſubordination, 'till it comes to the wielder, as they call him, who ſits at a rack-rent, and lives miſerably. Swift.

WE'LFARE. n. ſ. [well and fare.] Happineſs, ſucceſs proſperity.

If friends to a government forbear their aſſiſtance, they put it

it in the power of a few deſperate men to turn the welfare of thoſe who are ſuperiour to them in ſtrength and intereſt. Add.

Diſcretion is the perfection of reaſon; cunning is a kind of inſtinct that only looks out after our immediate intereſt and welfare. Addiſon's Spectator.

To Welk v. a. [Of this word in Spenſer I know not well the meaning. Pealcan, in Saxon, is to roll, walken, in German, and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds, whence I ſuppoſe welk, welk, or walk is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convolved body. Whilk is uſed for a ſmall ſhell fiſh.] To cloud, to obſcure.

Now ſad Winter welked hath the day,
And Phœbus, weary of his yearly taſk,
Eſtabliſhed hath his ſteeds in lowly laſt,
And taken up his inn in fiſhes haſk. Spenſer.

As gentle ſhepherd in ſweet eventide,
When ruddy Phœbus 'gins to welk in Weſt,
Marks wh ch do bite their haſty ſupper beſt. Fairy Queen.

The welked Phœbus 'gan avale
His weary wain. Spenſer.

Welked. adj. Wrinkled; wreathed.

Methought his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thouſand noſes,
Horns welk'd and wav'd like the enridged ſea. Shakeſpeare.

Welkin. n. ſ. [from pealcan to roll, or pelcen, clouds, Sax.]

1. The viſible regions of the air. Out of uſe, except in poetry.

Ne in all the welkin was no cloud. Chaucer.

He leaves the welkin way moſt beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the ſkyen,
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to ſhine. Fa. Qu.

The ſwallow peeps out of her neſt,
And cloudy welkin cleareth. Spenſer's Paſtorals.

Spur your proud horſes hard, and ride in blood
Amaze the welkin with your broken ſtaves. Shak. R. III.

With feats of arms
From either end of heav'n the welkin burns. Milton.

Now my taſk is ſmoothly done,
I can fly, or I can run
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bow'd welkin ſlow doth bend. Milton.

Their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips.

2. Welkin Eye, is, I ſuppoſe, blue eye; ſkycoloured eye.

Yet were it true
To ſay this boy were like me! Come, ſir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye, ſweet villain. Shakeſpeare.

Well. n. ſ. [pelle, pœll, Saxon.]

1. A ſpring; a fountain, a ſource.

Begin then, ſiſters of the ſacred well,
That from beneath the ſeat of Jove doth ſpring. Milton.

As the root and branch are but one tree,
And well and ſtream do but one river make,
So if the root and well corrupted be,
The ſtream and branch the ſame corruption take. Davies.

2. A deep narrow pit of water.

The muſcles are ſo many well-buckets: when one of them acts and draws, 'tis neceſſary that the other muſt obey. Dryden.

3. The cavity in which ſtairs are placed.

Hollow newelled ſtairs are made about a ſquare hollow newel: ſuppoſe the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and ſix foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of ſtairs from the firſt floor eleven foot high, it being intended a ſky-light ſhall fall through the hollow newel. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

To Well. v. n. [pealan, Saxon.] To ſpring, to iſſue as from a ſpring.

Thereby a cryſtal ſtream did gently play,
Which from a ſacred fountain welled forth away. Fa. Qu.

The bubbling wave did ever freſhly well. Fairy Queen.

A dreary corſe,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet well'd freſh, alas! Spenſer.

Himſelf aſſiſts to lift him from the ground,
With clotted locks, and blood that well'd from out the wound. Dryden's Æn.

From his two ſprings,
Pure welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Damhea rolls his infant ſtream. Thomſon's Summer.

To Well. v. a. To pour any thing forth.

To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation. Fairfax.

Well. adj. [Well ſeems to be ſometimes an adjective, though it is not always eaſy to determine its relations.]

There may be ſafety to the well affected Perſians; but to thoſe which do conſpire againſt us, a memorial of deſtruction. Eſth. xv. 23.

Should a whole hoſt at once diſcharge the bow,
My well-aim'd ſhaft with death prevents the foe. Pope.

What

What well appointed leader fronts us here? Shakesp.
Well appear'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
The pow'r of wisdom march'd before,
And ere the sacrificing throng he join'd,
Admonish'd thus his well-attending mind. Pope.
Such musick
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung,
While the Creator great
His constellations set,
And the well-balanc'd world on hinges hung. Milton.

Learners must at first be believers, and their master's rules having been once made axioms to them, they mislead those who think it sufficient to excuse them, if they go out of their way in a well-beaten track. Locke.

He chose a thousand horse, the flow'r of all
His warlike troops, to wait the funeral
To bear him back, and share Evander's grief;
A well-becoming, but a weak relief. Dryden.
Those opposed files,
Which lately met in the intestine shock,
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now, in mutual well-beseeming rank,
March all one way. Shakesp. Hen IV.

O'er the Elean plains, thy well-breath'd horse
Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryden.

In Raphael's first works are many small foldings, often repeated, which look like so many whipcords. Dryden.

WHIP'GRAFTING. n. f. [In gardening.]

Whipgrafting is done two ways. First, cut off the head of the stock, and smooth it, then cut the graft from a knot or bud on one side sloping, about an inch and a half long, with a shoulder, but not deep, that it may rest on the top of the stock. the graft must be cut from the shouldering smooth and even, sloping by degrees, that the lower end be thin. place the shoulder on the head of the stock, and mark the length of the cut part of the graft, and with your knife cut away so much of the stock as the graft did cover, but not any of the wood of the stock: place both together, that the cut part of both may join, and the sap unite the one to the other, and bind them close together, and defend them from the rain with tempered clay or wax, as before. The other way of whipgrafting is, where the grafts and the stocks are of an equal size: the stock must be cut sloping upwards from one side to the other, and the graft after the same manner from the shoulder downwards, that the graft may exactly join with the stock in every part, and so bind, and clay or wax them as before. Mortimer's Husbandry.

WHIP'HAND. n. f. [whip and hand.] Advantage over.

The archange, when discord was restive and would not be drawn from her beloved monastry with fair words, has the whip hand of her, and drags her out with many stripes. Loyd.

On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.

She what he swears regards no more
Than the deaf rocks when the loud billows roar;
But whirl'd away, to shun his hateful sight,
Hid in the forest. Dryden's Æn.

Wild and distracted with their fears,
They jostling plunge amidst the sounding deeps;
The flood away, the straggling squadron sweeps,
And men and arms, and horses whirling bears. Smith.

WHIRL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion; rapid circumvolution.

'Twere well your judgments but in plays did range;
But even your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score them on the stage. Dryden.

Wings raise my feet; I'm pleas'd to mount on high,
Trace all the mazes of the liquid sky;
The various turnings and their whirls declare,
And view in the vast regions of the air. Creech's Manilius.

Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years can waste. Creech.

I have been watching what thoughts came up in the whirl of fancy, that were worth communicating. Pope.

How the car rat'es, how its knocking wheels
Smoke in the whirl the circling sand arcenos,
And in the noble dust the chariot's hid. Smith.

When thou ran'st up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou had'st been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire. Shakespeare.

Though brimstone, pitch, wildfire, burn equally, and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fiery wind as gunpowder. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd. Sandys.

No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light. Addis. Guard.

In flames, like Semele's, be brought to bed,
While opening heli spouts wildfire at your head. Pope.

WILDGOOSECHASE. n. f. A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wildgoose.

If our wits run the wildgoosechase, I have done, for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakespeare.

Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation, that this wildgoosechase has cost him, and then say what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but loose, giddy frolicks? L'Estrange.

WI'LDING. n. f. [wildeinghe, Dut.] A wild sour apple.

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes, reaching from the ground. Dryd.

The red streak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, never pleasing to the palate. Mortimer.

The wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and refill
Its tenuity. Phillips.

He is giv'n
To sports, to wildness, and much company Shakespeare.

3. Savageness, brutality.

He came in like a wild man; but such a wildness as shewed his eye-sight had tamed him, full of withered leaves, which though they fell not, it threatened falling. Sidney.

Vainly thou tell'st me, what the woman's care
Shall in the wildness of the wood prepare Prior.

4. Uncultivated state.

Their wildness lose, and quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art Dryden.

5. Deviation from a settled course, irregularity.

A delirium is but a short wildness of the imagination; and a settled irregularity of fancy is distraction and madness. Watts's Log.

6. Alienation of mind.

Ophelia, I wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness; so shall I hope your virtues
May bring him to his wonted way again. Shakesp.

WILE n. f. [pile, Saxon, wiel, Islandick.] A deceit, a fraud, a trick, a stratagem; a practice artful, sly, and insidious.

Their leader by his wiles had much obtain'd,
And done much mischief on the English state. Daniel.

My sentence is for open war; of wiles
More unexpert, I boast not; them let those Contrive who need. Milton.

Life ebbing fast, the surest wile,
Gilding itself with Laura's smile. Rosscommon.

So Sforza, curs'd with a too fertile brain,
Lost by his wiles the pow'r his wit did gain. Dryd.

The heart of man is so full of wiles, artifices, and deceit, that there is no guessing at what he is from his speeches. Addison's Guardian.

Wisdom's above suspecting wiles,
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.

WI'LFUL. adj. [will and full.]

1. Stubborn, contumacious; perverse, inflexible.

2. Done or suffered by design.

Sthenoboea herself did choak
With wilful cord, for wanting of her will. Fairy Queen.

This let him know;
Leſt, wilfully offending, he pretend
Surpriſal Addiſon.

WILFULNESS n. ſ. [from wilful] Obſtinacy; ſtubbornneſs, perverſeneſs.

So full of wilfulneſs and ſelf-liking is our nature, that without ſome definitive ſentence, which being given, may ſtand, ſmall hope there is that ſtrifes will end. Hooker.

[illegible]
He that his ſorrow fought through wilfulneſs,
And his foe fetter'd would releaſe again,
Deſerves to taſte his folly's fruit. Fairy Queen.

Never hydra-headed wilfulneſs
So ſoon did loſe his ſeat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakeſpeare.

A ſtiff and ſtubborn obſtinacy, is not ſo much firmneſs and reſolution, as wilfulneſs L'Eſtrange.

That is not haſtily to be interpreted obſtinacy or wilfulneſs, which is the natural product of their age. Locke.

WILFULLY. adv. [from wilful] By ſtratagem, fraudulently.

They did work wilfully, and went and made as if they had been ambaſſadors. Joſ.

WILFULNESS n. ſ. [from wily.] Cunning; guile.

The ungodly, for his own luſt, doth perſecute the poor. Let them be taken in the crafty wilineſs that they have imagined. Pſalm x. 2.

WILL. n. ſ. [ƿilla, Saxon; wille, Dutch.]

1. Choice, arbitrary determination.

Will is the power, which the mind has to order the conſideration of any idea, or the forbearing to conſider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its reſt, and vice verſa. Locke's Works.

Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards an end, is termed choice. Hooker, b. i.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be ſo cruel to an humble foe?
If nature, then ſhe may it mend with ſkill,
If will, then ſhe at will may will forego. Spenſer.

Theſe things have a ſhew of wiſdom in will worſhip and humility. Col. ii. 23.

Will holds the ſceptre in the ſoul,
And on the paſſions of the heart doth reign Sir J. Dav.

The truth is, ſuch a man underſtands by his will, and believes a thing true or falſe, merely as it agrees or diſagrees with a violent inclination, and therefore, while that inclination aſts in its ſtrength, he diſcovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.

2. Diſcretion, choice.

Go then the guilty at thy will chaſtiſe. Pope.

3. Command; direction.

At his firſt ſight the mountains are ſhaken, and at his will the ſouth wind bloweth. Eccleſ. xliii. 16.

Phil. i. 15.

10. Ill-will. Malice; malignity.

11. [Contracted from William.] Will with a wiſp, Jack with a lanthorn.

Will with the wiſp is of a round figure, in bigneſs like the flame of a candle; but ſometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs ſet on fire. It ſometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle, at other times more obſcure, and of a purple colour. When viewed near at hand, it ſhines leſs than at a diſtance. They wander about in the air, not far from the ſurface of the earth, and are more frequent in places that are unctuous, mouldy, marſhy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying places, places of execution, dunghills. They commonly appear in ſummer, and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about ſix feet from the ground. Now they dilate themſelves, and now contract. Now they go on like waves, and rain as it were ſparks of fire, but they burn nothing. They follow thoſe that run away, and fly from thoſe that follow them. Some that have been catched were obſerved to conſiſt of a ſhining, viſcous, and gelatinous matter, like the ſpawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only ſhining, ſo that the matter ſeems to be phoſphorus, prepared and raiſed from putrified plants or carcaſſes by the heat of the ſun; which is condenſed by the cold of the evening, and then ſhines. Ed.

Will-a wiſp miſleads night faring clowns,
O'er hills and forking bogs.

To WILL. v. a. [ƿilgan, Gothick, ƿilan, Saxon, willen, Dutch.]

1. To deſire that any thing ſhould be, or be done.

To will, is to bend our minds to the having or doing of that which they ſee to be good. Hooker.

Let Richard
[illegible]

I ſpeak not of God's ordaining his own will, but his predetermining the acts of our will. There is as great difference betwixt theſe two, as betwixt my willing a thing myſelf, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Whoſoever wills the doing of a thing, if the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it, and whoſoever does not do that thing, which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.

A man that ſits ſtill, is ſaid to be at liberty, becauſe he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To be inclined or reſolved to have.

She's too rough for me,
There, there, Hortenſio, will you any wife? Shakeſp.

3. To command; to direct.

St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up ſomewhat on the Sunday, and to reſerve it there for the church of Jeruſalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guiſe,
When man was willed to love his enemies. Shakeſp.

Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the uſe of arms,
Our colours are as ſtrong, our cauſe the beſt,
Then reaſon will our hearts ſhould be as good Shakeſp.

He willed him to be of good comfort, promiſing to beſtow upon him whatſoever he ſhould wiſh. Knolles.

If they had any buſineſs, his Majeſty willed that they [illegible]

It is your's, O queen! to will,
The work, which duty binds me to fulfil. Dryden.

4. It has a looſe and light ſignification.

Let the circumſtances of life be what, or where they will, a man ſhould never neglect improvement. Watts.

5. It is one of the ſigns of the future tenſe, of which it is difficult to ſhow or limit the ſignification.

I will come. I am determined to come, importing choice.

Thou wilt come. It muſt be ſo that thou muſt come; importing neceſſity.

Wilt thou come? Haſt thou determined to come? importing choice.

He will come. He is reſolved to come; or it muſt be that he muſt come, importing either choice or neceſſity.

It will come. It muſt ſo be that it muſt come; importing neceſſity.

The plural follows the analogy of the ſingular.

WILLS and Wits, among the Engliſh Saxons, as viele at this day among the Germans, ſignified many. So wiſeomus is the defender of many: wiſfred, peace to many, which are anſwered in ſenſe and ſignification by Polymachus, Iſocrates, and Polyphius. Gib. Cæd.

WILLING. adj. [from will]

1. Inclined to any thing.

He willing to pleaſe one in authority, forces all his ſkill to make the remembrance of the beſt faſhion. Wotton.

Some other are, and as willing, pays
The rigid ſatisfaction. Addiſon.

Can any man make a better ſupport under all than the friendſhip of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him! Bentley.

2. Pleaſed.

2. Pleased, desirous
3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.
As many as were willing hearted brought bracelets and ear-rings. Ex. xxxv. 22.
4. Ready; complying.

To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to. Shakespeare.
This ransom, if my whole inheritance
May compass, it shall willingly be paid. Milton.
2. By one's own desire.
The condition of that people is not so much to be envied as some would willingly represent it. Addison.

WI'LLINGNESS. n. s. [from willing.] Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.
We praise the things we hear with much more willingness, than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and over-awed by the other. Ben. Johnson.
It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good as far as our power reacheth. Calamy.
Force never yet a generous mind did gain;
We yield on parley; but are storm'd in vain.
Constraint, in all things, makes the p
Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden.

WI'LLOW. n. s. [pelle, Saxon, salix, Lat. gwalow, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers.
It hath amentaceous flowers consisting of several stamina, which are collected into a spike but are barren. The embryoes are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Mi
I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken, to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt. Shakesp.
In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks Shakesp.
Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake. Shakespeare.
When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes he resorts, obscur'd with reeds,
And hoary willows, which the moisture feeds. Sandy.
Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Their harps upon the neighb'ring willows hung,
Nor joyous hymn encouraging their tongue. Prior.

WI'LLOWISH. adj. [willow.] Relembling the colour of willow.
Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour. Walton.

WI'LLOWWORT. n. s. A plant.
The flower consists of several leaves, produced from the inclosures of the flower-cup, placed circularly, and expanded like a rose; from the centre of the flower-cup rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit of two cells, full of small seeds, wrapped up in the flower-cup. Miller.

WI'LY. adj. [from wile.] Cunning, sly; full of stratagem; fraudulent
They are so cautelous and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and shifts. Spenser.
In the wily snake
Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark
As from his wit, and native subtilty
Proceeding. Milton's Par. L.
Such [illegible] wily, doubling disposition of mind, is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleased, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Cains. South's Serm.
My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my young its wound;
'Tis love said she Dryden.

WI'MBLE. n. s. [wimpel, old Dutch, from wemelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored

At harvest-home, trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fears to broach:
He says the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack Dryd.
As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who plye the wimble some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep-piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.
The trepan is like a wimble, used by joiners. Sharp.

WI'MBLE adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.
He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
[illegible]
Therewith afraid I ran away;
But he that earst seem'd but to play,
A shaft in earnest snatched. Spenser.

WI'MPLE. n. s. [guimple, Fr.] A hood; a veil. It is printed in Spenser perhaps by mistake wimble.
So fair and fresh, as freshest flower in May,
For she had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow like sad wimple thrown away. Fairy Q.
The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins Isaiah iii. 22.

To WI'MPLE. v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil.
The same did hide,
Under a veil that wimpled was full low. Fairy Q.

WIN. Whether initial or final in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from pin, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people; from the Saxon pine, i. e. dear, beloved. In the name of places it implies a battle fought there. Gib.

To WIN v. a. [Pret. won and wan, part. pas. won, pinna, Saxon; winnen, Dutch.]
1. To gain by conquest.
The town of Gaza where the enemy lay encamped, was not so strong but it might be won. Knolles.

She is a woman, therefore to be won. Shakesp.
That flood witness'd his inconstant flame,
When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame. Gay.

To WIN. v. n
1. To gain the victory
Nor is it ought but just,
That he who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.
2. To gain influence or favour.
You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your matter, and not upon his affections only. Bacon.
You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others. Dryden.
Thy words like musick every breast controul;
Steal thro' the air, and win upon the soul. Pope.
3. To gain ground.
The rabble will in time win upon power. Shakesp.
4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.
Charles I will play no more to night,
My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.
—Sir, I did never win of you before.
But little, Charles;
Nor shall not when my fancy's on my play. Shak.

To WINCE. v. n. [grunga, Welsh.] To kick as impatient of a rider, or of pain.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word. Shakesp.
Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince. B. Johns.
The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if h'had been besides his sense. Hudibras

WINCH. n. s. [guincher, French, to twist.] A windlace; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.

Put a winch with the wheel. Mortim.

To WINCH. v. a. [The same with wince, or perhaps from guincher, French, to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.

We who have free souls,
It touches not, let the gall'd jade winch;
Our withers are unwrung. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled
Nor did I ever winch or grudge it. Hudibras.
This last allusion gall'd the panther more,
Yet seem'd she not to winch, tho' shrewdly pain'd. Dryden.
Their consciences are gall'd, and this makes them wince and fling, as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.

WINCOPIPE. n. s.

There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the wincopipe, which if it open in the morning, you may be sure, a fair day will follow. Bacon.

WIND. n. s. [pind, Saxon, wind, Dutch, gwynt, Welsh.]

1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is to any other, with an impetus that is sensible to us, wherefore it was not ill called by the ancients, a fluxter course of air, a flowing wave of air, a flux, effusion, or stream of air. Arbuthnot on Air.

The worthy fellow our general! He's the rock, the oak not to be wind shaken. Shak. Coriolanus.
Love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides than the sun beams,
Driving back shadows over low'ring hills.
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love;
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings Shak.

Falmouth lieth farther out in the trade way, and so offereth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth. Carew.

Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction, more in one place than another, by the sunbeams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions. Cheyne.

2. Direction of the blast from a particular point. As eastward; westward.

I'll give thee a wind.
I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow;
All the quarters that they know
I'th shipman's card. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. Breath, power or act of respiration.

If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. Shakesp.

His wind he never took whilst the cup was at his mouth, but justly observ'd the rule of drinking with one breath. Hake.

The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in purfy old men, seems to agree most with the orange. Temple.

It stop'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden.

4. Air caused by any act.

Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakesp.
In an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes. Milt.

5. Breath modulated by an instrument.

Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create sound; as in pipes and wind instruments. Bacon.

Their instruments were various in their kind,
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind. Dryden.

6. Air impregnated with scent.

A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,
By often shifting into distant grounds,
Till finding all his artifices vain,
To save his life, he leap'd into the main.
But there, alas! he could no safety find,
A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind. Swift

7. Flatulence, windiness.

Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind. Milton.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.

Think not with wind of airy threats to awe. Milton.

9. Down the WIND. To decay.

1. Deſtruction by being driven on rocks or ſhallows at ſea; deſtruction by ſea.

Fair be ye ſure; but hard and obſtinate,
As is a rock amidſt the raging floods;
'Gainſt which a ſhip, of ſuccour deſolate,
Doth ſuffer wreck both of herſelf and goods. Spenſer.

Like thoſe that ſee their wreck
Ev'n on the rocks of death; and yet they ſtrain,
That death may not them idly find t'attend
To their uncertain taſk, but work to meet their end. Daniel.

Think not that flying fame reports my fate;
I preſent, I appear, and my own wreck relate. Dryden.

2. Diſſolution by violence.

Not only Paradiſe,
In this commotion, but the ſtarry cope
Had gone to wreck. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

3. Ruin; deſtruction.

O cruel, could'ſt thou find none other
To wreck thy ſpleen on? Parricide!
Like Nero, thou haſt ſlain thy mother. Prior.

To WRECK. v. n. To ſuffer wreck.

With manlier objects we muſt try
His conſtancy, with ſuch as have more ſhew
Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular praiſe,
Rocks whereon greateſt men have often wreck'd.

WREN. n. ſ. [ſpenna, Saxon.] A ſmall bird.

The poor wren,
The moſt diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her neſt, againſt the owl. Shakeſp. Mach.

All ages have conceived that the wren is the leaſt of birds, yet the diſcoveries of America have ſhewed us one far leſs, the hum-bird not much exceeding a beetle.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To WRENCH. v. a. [ſprengan, Saxon, wrenghen, Dutch.]

1. To pull by violence; to wreſt, to force.

Wrench his ſword from him. Shakeſ. Othello.

Oh form!
How often do'ſt thou with thy caſe, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiſer ſouls
To thy falſe ſeeming! Shak. Meaſure for Meaſure.

Cæſar's army, wanting ſomething, demanded a miſſion or diſcharge, though with no intention it ſhould be granted, but thought by that means to wrench him to their other deſires. Bacon.

2. To ſprain; to diſtort.

O moſt ſmall fault!
How ugly did'ſt thou in Cordelia ſhow?
Which, like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature
From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakeſp. King Lear.

You wrenched your foot againſt a ſtone, and were forced to ſtay. Swift.

WRENCH. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A violent pull or twiſt.

2. A ſprain.

Some ſmall part of the foot being injured by a wrench, the whole leg thereby loſes its ſtrength. Locke.

3. WRENCHES, in Chaucer, ſignifies means, ſleights, ſubtilties; which is, I believe, the ſenſe here.

He reſolved to make his profit of this buſineſs of Britain, as a quarrel for war; and that of Naples as a wrench and mean for peace. Bacon's Henry VII.

To WREST. v. a. [pnæſtan, Saxon.]

1. To twiſt by violence; to extort by writhing or force.

To wreſt this ſentence, to wreſt thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reaſon. Aſcham.

To what wretched ſtate reſerv'd,
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n,
To be thus wreſted from us? Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Where you charged in perſon, you were a conqueror: the rebels afterwards recovered ſtrength, and wreſted that victory from others that they had loſt to you. Dryden.

Our country's cauſe,
That drew our ſwords, now wreſts 'em from our hand,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood,
Unprofitably ſhed. Addiſon's Cato.

O prince, I bluſh to think what I have ſaid,
But fate has wreſted the confeſſion from me. Addiſon.

2. To diſtort, to writhe, to force.

So far to extend their ſpeeches, is to wreſt them againſt their meaning. Hooker.

My father's purpoſes have been miſtook,
And ſome about him have too laviſhly
Wreſted his meaning and authority. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

Wreſt once the law to your authority;
To do a great right, do a little wrong. Shakeſpeare.

WREST. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Diſtortion; violence.

Whereas it is concluded, out of thoſe ſo weak premiſes, that the retaining of divers things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have caſt out, muſt needs argue that we do not well, unleſs we can ſhew that they have done ill: what needed this wreſt, to draw out from us an accuſation of foreign churches? Hooker.

2. It is uſed in Spenſer and Shakeſpeare for an active or moving power. I ſuppoſe, from the force of a tilter acting with his lance in his reſt.

Adown he keſt it with ſo puiſſant wreſt,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave againſt his mother earth a groneful ſound. F. Q.

Antenor is ſuch a wreſt in their affairs,
That their negotiations all muſt ſlack'n,
Wanting his manage. Shakeſ. Troilus and Creſſida.

WRESTER. n. ſ. [from wreſt.] He who wreſts.

To WRE'STLE. v. n. [from wreſt.]

1. To contend who ſhall throw the other down.

You have loſt the fight of good wreſtling. Shakeſpeare.

If ever he goes alone again, I'll never wreſtle for prize more. Shakeſ. As you like it.

Another,

Another, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clavicle from the sternon. Wiseman's Surgery.

To play or wrestle well, it should be used with those that do it better. Temple.

None in the leap spring with so strong a bound,
Or former in the wrestling press the ground. Pope.

2. To struggle; to contend.

I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedick,
To wish him wrestle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it. Shakespeare.

He knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies, and so abhorred to be entangled in such. Clarendon.

WRE'STLER. n. f. [from wrestle.]

1. One who wrestles; one who professes the athletick art

Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here? Shakesp.

When the young wrestlers at their sport grew warm,
Old Milo wept, to see his naked arm. Denham.

'Tis not from whom, but where we live,
The place does oft those graces give:
Great Junius, on the mountains bred,
A flock perhaps, or herd, had led;
He that the world subdu'd, had been
But the best wrestler on the green. Waller.

2. One who contends in wrestling.

So earnest with thy God, can no new care;
No sense of danger, interrupt thy prayer?
The sacred wrestler, 'till a blessing giv'n,
Quits not his hold, but halting conquers heav'n. Waller.

Two wrestlers help to pull each other down. Dryden.

WRE'TCH. n. f. [pecca, Saxon.]

1. A miserable mortal.

When I loved, I was a wretch. Addison.

She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;
He smiles, and says his Edward is instal'd,
That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more. Shak.

The butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strives. Shakesp.

Illustrious wretch! repine not, nor reply:
View not what heav'n ordains, with reason's eye;
For bright the object is, the distance is too high. Prior.

2. A worthless sorry creature.

Base-minded wretches, are your thoughts so deeply bemired
[illegible] as of respect of gain the poultry wool may yield you, to let so much time pass without knowing perfectly her estate? Sidney.

He now
Has these poor men in question: never saw I
Wretches so quake; they kneel, they kiss the earth,
Forswear themselves as often as they speak. Shakespeare.

Title of honour, worth and virtue's right,
Should not be given to a wretch so vile. Daniel's Civil War.

When they are gone, a company of starved hungry wretches shall take their places. L'Estrange.

3. It is used by way of slight, or ironical pity, or contempt.

When soon away the wasp doth go;
Poor wretch was never frighted so:
He thought his wings were much too slow,
O'erjoy'd they so were parted Drayton's Nymphid

Then, if the spider find him fast beset,
She flies forth, and runs along her loom.
She joys to touch the captive in her net,
And drags the little wretch in triumph home. Dryden.

4. It is sometimes a word of tenderness, as we now say poor thing.

Chastened but thus, and thus his lesson taught,
The happy wretch she put into her breast. Sidney.

WRE'TCHED. adj. [from wretch.]

1. Miserable; unhappy.

These we should judge to be most miserable, but that a wretcheder sort there are, on whom, whereas nature hath bestowed ripe capacity, their evil disposition seriously goeth about therewith to apprehend God, as being not God. Hooker.

O cruel death! to those you are more kind,

Why dost thou drive me
To range all o'er a waste and barren place,
To find a friend? The wretched have no friends. Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.

3. Sorry; pitiful; paltry, worthless.

When God was served with legal sacrifices, such was the miserable and wretched condition of some mens minds, that the best of every thing they had, being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor, starved, or diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God Hooker.

That to contempt can empty scribblers bring. Roscommon.

4. Despicable; hatefully contemptible

An adventure worthy to be remembered for the unused examples therein, as well of true natural goodness as of wretched ungratefulness.

WRE'TCHEDLY. adv. [from wretched.]

1. Miserably, unhappily

From these two wars, so wretchedly entered into, the duke's ruin took its date. Clarendon

2. Meanly; despicably.

When such little shuffling arts come once to be ripped up, and laid open, how poorly and wretchedly must that man sneak, who finds himself guilty and baffled too? South.

WRE'TCHEDNESS. n. f. [from wretched.]

1. Misery; unhappiness; afflicted state

My misery cannot be greater than it is: fear not the danger of my bond fees, I cannot fall worse than I am, and do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchedness. Sian.

He 'gan inquire
What hard mishap him brought to such distress,
And made that caitif's thrall the thrain of wretchedness. F. Q.

Clarion did at last decline
To lowest wretchedness; and is there then
Such rancor in the hearts of mighty men? Spenser.

When they are weary of wars, and brought down to extreme wretchedness, then they creep a little, and sue for grace, 'till they have recovered their strength again. Spenser.

I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing. Shakespeare.

We have with the feeling lost the very memory of such wretchedness as our forefathers endured by those wars, of all others the most cruel. Raleigh.

2. Pitifulness; despicableness.

WRE'TCHLESS. n. f. [This is, by I know not whose corruption, written for reckless.] Careless; mindless; heedless.

Y A W — Y E A

Y, At the beginning of words, is a conſonant; at the end, and when it follows a conſonant, is a vowel, and has the ſound of i. It is uſed at the end of words, and whenever two i's would come together; and in words derived from the Greek, to expreſs the υ. Y was much uſed by the Saxons, whence y is found for i in the old Engliſh writers.

YACHT. n. ſ. A ſmall ſhip for carrying paſſengers.

YARD. n. ſ. [ȝeapo, Saxon.]

1. Incloſed ground adjoining to an houſe.

One of the lions leaped down into a neighbour's yard, where, nothing regarding the crowing of the cocks, he eat them up. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Xanthus one day ſent Æſop into the yard, and bade him look well about him. L'Eſtrange.

His wanton kids with budding horns prepar'd,
Fight harmleſs battles in his homely yard. Dryden.

2. [ȝeapo, Saxon.] A meaſure of three feet.

A peer, a counſellor, and a judge, are not to be meaſured by the common yard, but by the pole of ſpecial grace. Bacon.

The arms, ſpread croſs in a ſtraight Line, and meaſured from one end of the long finger on one hand, to that of the other, made a meaſure equal to the ſtature, and is named a fathom. Half of that, viz. from the end of the long finger of either arm, ſo ſpread, to the middle of the breaſt is, with us, called a yard. Holder on Time.

An aqueduct of a Gothick ſtructure, that conveys water from mount St. Francis to Spoletto, from the foundation of the loweſt arch to the top, is two hundred and thirty yards. Add.

3. The ſupports of the ſails.

A breeze from ſhore began to blow;
The ſailors ſhip their oars, and ceaſe to row;
Then hoiſt their yards a-trip, and all their ſails
Let fall to court the wind. Dryden.

YA'RDWAND. n. ſ. [yard and wand.] A meaſure of a yard.

All the revolutions in nature can give it nothing more than different degrees of extenſions. What affinity has thinking with ſuch attributes? no more than there is between a ſyllogiſm and a yardwand. Collier.

YARE. adj. [ȝeapye, Saxon.] Ready; dextrous; eager.

Yare, yare, good Iras, quick;—methinks I hear
Antony call. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

I do deſire to learn, Sir; and I hope, if you have occaſion to uſe me for your turn, you ſhall find me yare. Shakeſpeare.

YA'RELY. adv. [from yare.] Dextrouſly; ſkilfully.

The ſilken tackles,
Swell with the touches of thoſe flower-ſoft hands
That yarely frame the office. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleop.

YARN. n. ſ. [ȝeapn, Saxon.] Spun wool, woollen thread.

You would be another Penelope; yet they ſay, all the yarn ſhe ſpun in Ulyſſes's abſence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipt them not; and our crimes would deſpair, if they were not cheriſh'd by our virtues. Shakeſpeare.

Yarn is a commodity very proper to this country, which of all others ought to be moſt encouraged. Temple.

It may be uſeful for the reeling of yarn. Wilkins.

The fates but only ſpin the coarſer clue,
The fineſt of the wool is left for you.
Spare me but one ſmall portion of the twine,
And let the ſiſters cut below your line:
The reſt among the rubbiſh may they ſweep,
Or add it to the yarn of ſome old miſer's heap. Dryden.

To YARR. v. n. [from the ſound, hirrio, Lat.] To growl, or ſnarl like a dog. Ainſworth.

YARROW. n. ſ. A plant which grows wild on the dry banks, and is uſed in medicine.

The gaſhes,
That bloodily did yawn upon his face. Shakeſpeare.

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
For ſwallowing up the treaſure of the realm. Shakeſp.

He ſhall caſt up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit, from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys

Hell at laſt
Yawning receiv'd them whole, and on them cloſ'd. Milton.

The ſword pierc'd his tender ſides;
Down fell the beauteous youth; the yawning wound
Guſh'd out a purple ſtream. Dryden.

High ſhe rear'd her arm, and with her ſceptre ſtruck
The yawning cliff, from its diſparted height
Adown the mount the guſhing torrent ran. Prior.

3. To expreſs deſire by yawning.

The chiefeſt thing at which lay reformers yawn, is, that the clergy may, through conformity in condition, be poor as the apoſtles were. In which one circumſtance, if they imagine ſo great perfection, they muſt think that church which hath ſuch ſhore of mendicant friars, a church in that reſpect moſt happy. Hooker.

YAWN. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Oſcitation.

Thee, Paridel, ſhe mark'd thee, there
Stretch'd on the rack of a too eaſy chair;
And heard thy everlaſting yawn confeſs
The pains and penalties of idleneſs. Pope's Dunciad.

2. Gape; hiatus.

Hence to the borders of the marſh they go,
That mingles with the baleful ſtreams below,
And ſometimes with a mighty yawn, 'tis ſaid,
Opens a dreadful paſſage to the dead,
Who, pale with fear, the rending earth ſurvey,
And ſtarde at the ſudden flaſh of day.

YA'WNING. adj. [from yawn.] Sleepy; ſlumbering.

Ere to black Hecat's ſummons
The ſhard-born beetle, with his drowſie hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there ſhall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakeſp. Macbeth

Y'CLAD. part. for clad. Cloathed

Her ſight did raviſh, but her grace in ſpeech,
Her words yclad with wiſdom's majeſty,
Make me from wond'ring fall to weeping joys. Shakeſp.

Y'CLEPED. [The participle paſſive of clepe, to call, clepan, Saxon; with the increaſing particle y, which was uſed in the old Engliſh in the preterites and participles, from the Saxon ge.] Called; termed, named.

YEANLING. n. s. [from yean.] The young of sheep.

All the yeanlings which were streak'd and pied,
Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakespeare.

YEAR. n. s. [gear, Saxon.]

If one by the word year mean twelve months of thirty days each, i. e. three hundred and sixty days; another intend a solar year of three hundred sixty-five days; and a third mean a lunar year, or twelve lunar months, i. e. three hundred fifty-four days, there will be a great variation and error in their account of things, unless they are well apprized of each other's meaning. Watts's Logick.

See the minutes, how they run
How many makes the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shakespeare.

With the year
Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of morn. Milton.

Oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them, to serve them for many years laying, allowing such a proportion for every year, as will serve for one or two incubations. Ray on the Creation.

Both young and old. Shakſpeare.
There's not the ſmalleſt orb which thou beholdeſt,
But in his motion like an angel ſings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims.
I firmly am reſolv'd
Not to beſtow my youngeſt daughter,
Before I have a huſband for the elder.
Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are ſalter than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.
He ordain'd a lady for his prize,
Graceful, beautiful, fair and young, and ſkill'd in houſe-wifery. Chapman.
In timorous deer he hanſels his young paws,
And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws Cowley.
Nor need'ſt thy daughter to be told,
Though now thy ſpritly blood with age be cold,
Thou haſt been young Dryden.

When we ſay a man is young, we mean that his age is yet but a ſmall part of that which uſually men attain to: and when we denominate him old, we mean that his duration is run out almoſt to the end of that which men do not uſually exceed. Locke.

It will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion, by God's ordination, belonged to the eldeſt ſon, becauſe Jacob the *young*eſt here had it. Locke.

From earth they rear him ſtruggling now with death,
And Neſtor's youngeſt ſtops the vents of breath. Pope.

2. Ignorant; weak.

Come, eldeſt brother, thou art too young in this. Shakeſp.

3. It is ſometimes applied to vegetable life.

There be trees that bear beſt when they begin to be old, as almonds; the cauſe is, for that all trees that bear muſt have an oily fruit; and young trees have a more watry juice, and leſs concocted. Bacon.

YOUNG n. ſ. The offspring of animals collectively.

The hedge-ſparrow fed the cuckoo ſo long,
That it had it's head bit off by its young Shakeſp. King Lear.
So many days my ewes have been with young,
So many weeks ere the poor fools will yean. Shakeſpeare.
The eggs diſcloſe their callow young. Milton

The reaſon why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is becauſe there might be more plenty. Ward's Anſwer to againſt Atterſon.

Not ſo her young, for their unequal line
Was heroes make, half human, half divine,
Their earthly mold obnoxious was to fate,
Th' immortal part aſſum'd immortal ſtate. Dryden.

Thoſe inſects, for whoſe young nature hath not made proviſion of ſufficient ſuſtenance, do themſelves gather and lay up in ſtore for them Ray on the Creat.

The ſkarfed bark parts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the ſtrumpet wind. Shakeſpeare.

What, will you make a younker of me? ſhall I not take mine eaſe in mine inn, but I ſhall have my pocket pick'd.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewel of the glorious ſun
How well reſembles it the prime of youth,
Trimm'd like a younker prancing to his love. Shakeſpeare.

Fame tells, by age fame reverend grown,
That Phœbus gave his chariot to his ſon,
And whilſt the younger from the path declines,
Admiring the ſtrange beauty of the ſigns,
Proud of his charge, he drove the fiery horſe,
And would outgo his father in his courſe Creech.

The youngſter, who at nine and three,
Drinks with his ſiſters milk and tea,
From breakfaſt reads till twelve o'clock,
Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes and Locke. Prior.

Either your unparagoned miſtreſs is dead, or ſhe's outprized by a trifle. Shakeſpeare.

2. YOUR is uſed in an indeterminate ſenſe

Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough, ſo every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakeſpeare.

There is a great affinity between coins and poetry, and your medaliſt and critick are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addiſon on ancient Medals.

A diſagreement between theſe ſeldom happens, but among your antiquaries and ſchoolmen. Felton on the Claſſicks.

3. YOURS is uſed when the ſubſtantive goes before or is underſtood; as this is your book, this book is yours.

Pray for this man and for his ſhe,
Whoſe heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

That done, our day of marriage ſhall be yours,
One feaſt, one houſe, one mutual happineſs. Shakeſpeare.

This kiſs, if it durſt ſpeak,
Would ſtretch thy ſpirits up into the air.
Conceive and fare thee well.
— Ay, in the ranks of death —— Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

He is forſworn, if ever thoſe eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the eaſt. Shakeſpeare.

While the ſword this monarchy ſecures,
'Tis managed by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.
My wealth, my city and myſelf are yours. Dryden

It is my employment to revive the old of paſt ages to the preſent, as it is yours to tranſmit the young of the preſent to the future. Pope.

YOURSE'LF. n. ſ. [your and ſelf] You, even you; ye, not others

If it ſtand as you yourſelf ſtill do,
Within the eye of honour, be aſſur'd,
My purſe, my perſon, my extremeſt means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occaſions. Shakeſpeare.

O heav'ns!
If you do love old men, if your ſweet ſway
Allow obedience, if yourſelves are old,
Make it your cauſe. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

YOUTH. n. ſ. [geogud, Saxon.]

1. The part of life ſucceeding to childhood and adoleſcence; the time from fourteen to twenty eight.

But could youth laſt, and love ſtill breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need,
Then theſe delights my mind might move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Shakeſpeare.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewel of the glorious ſun;
How well reſembles it the prime of youth,
Trimm'd like a yonker, prancing to his love. Shakeſp.

His ſtarry helm unbuckled ſhow'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.

The ſolidity, quantity, and ſtrength of the aliment is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muſcular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbuthnot.

2. A young man.

Siward's ſon,
And many unrough youths even now,
Proteſt their firſt of manhood. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

If this were ſeen,
The happieſt youth viewing his progreſs through,
What paſt, what to paſſ, what cloſhes to chuſe,
Would ſhut the book and ſit him down and die. Shakeſp.

About him exerciſ'd heroick games
Th' unarmed youth of heav'n. Milton.

O'er the lofty gate his art emboſs'd
Androgeos' death, and off'rings to his ghoſt,
Sev'n youths from Athens yearly ſent, to meet
The fate appointed by revengeful Crete. Dryden.

The pious chief
A hundred youths from all his train elects,
And to the Latian court their courſe directs. Dryden.

3. Young men. Collectively.

As it is fit to read the beſt authors to youth firſt, ſo let them be of the openeſt and cleareſt; as Livy before Salluſt, Sidney before Donne. Ben Johnſon.

The graces put not more exactly on
Th' attire of Venus, when the ball ſhe won,
Than that young beauty by thy care is dreſt,
When all your youth prefers her to the reſt. Waller.

YOU'THFUL. adj. [youth and full.]

1. Young.

Our army is diſpers'd already:

Eaſt, weſt, north, ſouth Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

Here, in a heap of ſlain, among the reſt,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppreſt
Of ſlaughter'd foes. Dryden.

2. Suitable to the firſt part of life.

Here be all the pleaſures
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the freſh blood grows lively, and returns
Briſk as the April buds in primroſe ſeaſon. Milton.

In his years were ſeen,
A youthful vigour and autumnal green Prior.
The nymph ſurveys him, and beholds the grace
Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pope.

3. Vigorous as in youth.

How is a good Chriſtian animated by a ſtedfaſt belief of an everlaſting enjoyment of perfect felicity, ſuch as, after millions of millions of ages is ſtill youthful and flouriſhing, and inviting as at the firſt? no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity. Bentley.

YOU'THFULLY. adv. [from youthful] In a youthful manner.

YOU'THLY. adj. [from youth.] Young; early in life. Obſolete.

If I had had time to have made new leveries, I would have beſtowed the thouſand pound I borrowed of you, but it is no matter, this poor ſhow doth better, this doth infer the zeal I had to ſee him. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

O Cromwell, Cromwell
Had I but ſerv'd my God with half the zeal
I ſerv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakeſpeare.

Among the ſeraphims
Abdiel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe,
The current of his fury thus oppoſ'd. Milton's Parad. Loſt

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will. Dryden.

She with ſuch a zeal the cauſe embrac'd,
As women, where they will, are all in haſte,
The father, mother, and the kin beſide,
Were overborne by the fury of the tide. Dryden.

The princes applaud with a furious joy,
And the king ſeiz'd a flambeau with zeal to deſtroy Dryden

Good men often bemiſh the reputation of their piety by over acting ſome things in their religion, by an indiſcreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotſon.

True zeal ſeems not to be any one ſingle affection of the ſoul, but rather a ſtrong mixture of many holy affections, rather a gracious conſtitution of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, ſwaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions; all not only unCounterfeit, but moſt fervent Sprat's Sermons.

When the ſins of a nation have provoked God to forſake it he ſuffers thoſe to concur in the moſt pernicious counſels for enſlaving conſcience, who pretend to the greateſt zeal for the liberty of it. Stillingfleet.

This rebellion has diſcovered to his majeſty, who have eſpouſed his intereſts with zeal or indifference. Addiſon's Freeh.

A ſcorn of flattery and a zeal for truth. Pope.

ZEALOT n. ſ. [zelotes, French, ζηλωτης] One paſſionately ardent in any cauſe. Generally uſed in diſpraiſe

The fury of zealots, inteſtine bitterneſs and diviſion were the greateſt occaſion of the laſt fatal deſtruction of Jeruſalem. King Charles.

Are not thoſe men too often the greateſt zealots who are moſt notoriouſly ignorant? true zeal ſhould always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unwearied paſſion, for what it once knows to be worthy of ſuch paſſion. Sprat

No wonder that ſo many of theſe deluded zealots have been engaged in a cauſe which they at firſt abhorred, and have wiſhed or acted for the ſucceſs of an enterprize, that might have ended in the extirpation of the proteſtant religion. Addiſon.

ZEALOUS. adj. [from zeal] Ardently paſſionate in any cauſe.

Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we act our temporal affairs with a care no greater than our neceſſity, and in actions of religion we be zealous, active, and operative, ſo far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

day, at height of noon, came to my ſphere,
A ſpirit, zealous, as he ſeem'd to know
More of the Almighty's works. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

We ſhould be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of thoſe ſnares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive. Decay of Piety.

It is not at all good to be zealous againſt any perſon, but only againſt their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for perſons but then it ſhould be only for good things, a rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for ill things, all manner of zeal for little things. Sprat's Sermons

Being inſtructed only in the general, and zealous in the main deſigns; and as finite beings, not admitted into the ſecrets of government, the laſt reaſons of providence, or capable of diſcovering the final purpoſes of God, they muſt be ſometimes ignorant of the means conducing to thoſe ends in which alone they can oppoſe each other. Dryden.

ZEALOUSLY. adv. [from zealous] With paſſionate ardour.

Thy care is fixt and zealouſly attends,
To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light,
And hope that reaps not ſhame. Milton.

To enter into a party as into an order of friars, with ſo reſigned an obedience to ſuperiors, is very unſuitable with the civil and religious liberties we ſo zealouſly aſſert Swift

ZEALOUSNESS n. ſ. [from zealous] The quality of being zealous.

ZECHIN n. ſ. [So named from zecha, a place in Venice where the mint is ſettled for coinage] A gold coin worth about nine ſhillings ſterling.

ZEDOARY n. ſ. [zedoaire, French.] A ſpicy plant, ſomewhat like ginger in its leaves, but of a ſweet ſcent.

ZED. n. ſ. The name of the letter Z

Then whereon zed, this unneceſſary letter. Shakeſpeare.

ZENITH n. ſ. [Arabick.] The point over head oppoſite to the nadir

our men if we believe that meet do live
Under the zenith of our frozen pole
Though none come thence, advertiſement to give,
Why bear we not the like faith of our ſouls? Donne.

The leaſt days are deſigned by the motion of the ſun, when that approaches neareſt our zenith, or vertical point, we call it ſummer Bentley's Phil. Sermons

Zenith

ZEPHYR. } n. f. [zephyrus, Latin.] The weſt wind, and ZEPHYRUS. § poetically any calm ſoft wind

They are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

Zephyr, you ſhall ſee a youth with a merry countenance, bearing in his hand a ſwan with wings diſplayed, as about to ſing. Peacham on Drawing.

Forth ruſh the levant and the ponent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr. Addiſon.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes. Milton.

Then every grove wakes,
Whence blending all the ſweeten'd zephyr ſprings. Thomſon.

2. A reliſh, a taſte added
1. ZEST v. a. To heighten by an additional reliſh
ZETE'TICK. adj. [from ζητεω.] Proceeding by enquiry.
ZEU'GMA. n. ſ. [from ζευγμα.] A figure in Grammar, when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers ſubſtantives, is referred to one expreſſly, and to the other by ſupplement, as fair over-came ſhame, and neceſſity fear, and madneſs reaſon.

ZOCLE. n. ſ. [In architecture.] A ſmall ſort of ſtand or pedeſtal, being a low ſquare piece or member, ſerving to ſupport a buſto, ſtatue, or the like, that needs to be raiſed, alſo a low ſquare member ſerving to ſupport a column, inſtead of a pedeſtal, baſe, or plinth. Dict.

ZO'DIACK. n. ſ. [zodiaque, French, ζωδιακὸς, ἀπὸ τῶν ζώων, the living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it, on globes.] The track of the ſun through the twelve ſigns, a great circle of the ſphere, containing the twelve ſigns.

And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his gliſt'ring coach. Shakeſpeare.

Years he numbered ſcarce thirteen,
When fates turn'd cruel,
Yet three fill'd zodiacks had he been
The ſtage's jewel. Ben Johnſon.

Hy his ſide,
As in a gliſt'ring zodiack hung the ſword,
Satan's dire dread; and in his hand the ſpear. Milton.

It exceeds even their abſurdity to ſuppoſe the zodiack and planets to be efficient of and antecedent to themſelves, or to exert any influences before they were in being. Bentley.

Here in a throne that caſt a dazling light,
Sat fixt in thought the mighty Stagyrite,
His ſacred head a radiant zodiack crown'd,
And various animals his ſides ſurround. Pope.

ZONE. n. ſ. [ζωνὴ, zona, Latin.]
1. A girdle.

The middle part
Girt like a ſtarry zone his waiſt, and round
Shone his loins, and thighs, with golden gold
And colours dipp'd in heav'n. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

An embroider'd zone ſurrounds her waiſt. Dryden.

Thy ſtatues, Venus, though by Phidias' hands
Deſign'd immortal, yet no longer ſtands;
The magick of thy ſhining zone is paſt,
But Sarſbury's garter ſhall for ever laſt. Granville.

Scarce could the goddeſs from her nymph be known,
But by the creſcent and the golden zone. Pope.

2. A diviſion of the earth.

The whole ſurface of the earth is divided into five zones: the firſt is contained between the two tropicks, and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the artick polar circle: the ſouthern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumſcribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centers.

True love is ſtill the ſame: the torrid zones,
And thoſe more frigid ones,
It muſt not know:
For love grown cold or hot,
Is luſt or friendſhip, not
The thing we ſhow;
For that's a flame would die,
Held down or up too high:
Then think I love more than I can expreſs,
And would love more, could I but love thee leſs. Suckling.

As five zones th'etheriall regions bind,
Five correſpondent are to earth aſſign'd:
The ſun, with rays directly darting down,
Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone. Dryden.

3. Circuit, circumference

Scarce the ſun
Hath finiſh'd half his journey, and ſcarce begins
His other half in the great zone of heav'n. Milton.

ZOOGRAPHER. n. ſ. [ζωὴ and γράφω.] One who deſcribes the nature, properties, and forms of animals.

One kind of locuſt ſtands not prone, or a little reclining upward; but a large erectneſs, elevating the two fore legs, and ſuſtaining itſelf in the middle of the other four, by zoographers called the prophet and praying locuſt.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ZOOGRAPHY. n. ſ. [of ζωὴ and γράφω.] A deſcription of the forms, natures, and properties of animals.

If we contemplate the end of the effect, its principal final cauſe being the glory of its maker, this leads us into divinity; and for its ſubordinate, as it is deſigned for alimental ſuſtenance to living creatures, and medicinal uſes to man, we are thereby conducted into zoography. Glanv. Scepſ.

ZOOLOGY. n. ſ. [of ζῶον and λόγος.] A treatiſe concerning living creatures.

ZOOPHYTE. n. ſ. [ζωόφυτον, of ζωὴ and φυτὸν.] Certain vegetables or ſubſtances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.
